a question as to the effect to be given to decrees, leases and other documents as evidence of certain facts (e.g. that of adoption and its consequences), the concurrent findings against the factum of the adoption will not be disturbed merely because the evidence largely consisted of leases and other written documents.(1)

The well-known rule of the Judicial Committee not to disturb concurrent findings of fact by the lower Courts, unless they are shown to be erroneous, is none the less applicable, although the Courts may not have taken precisely the same view of the weight to be attached to each particular item of evidence. Thus their Lordships declined to disturb such finding where one Court relied on the oral and the other on the documentary evidence.(2) In boundary cases the appellant must come prepared to show clearly where the decree appealed from is wrong, and what other course is right; it is insufficient to raise doubts as to the correctness of the decision.(3)

It has been recently held that the provisions as to concurrent findings on fact would be misconstrued if the Judges in India were by implication subjected to the duty of making their narrative of circumstances minutely exhaustive, under the penalty of being presumed to have overlooked elementary considerations.(4)

The Judicial Committee will not, on the ground that there was some imperfection in the pleadings, set aside the decree of a High Court, when the High Court were right on the merits of the case.(5) Nor will their Lordships allow any new point to be taken for the first time in the Privy Council.(6)

Reversal of decree on preliminary question: entry into merits.—In Fischer v. Kamala Naicker (7) it was arranged, in the commencement of the argument, with the consent of the counsel on both sides, that if their Lordships should be of opinion that the decision of the Court below could not be sustained on the grounds on which it had been based, they should proceed to consider the whole case on its merits, and finally dispose of it. And their Lordships, being of opinion that the decision could not be sustained on the grounds on which it had been based, considered the whole case on its merits and dismissed the appeal without costs, saying that as they dismissed the appeal on wholly different grounds from those relied on by the Court below the dismissal should be without costs.

Costs.—When a cause is remanded by the Privy Council and the miscarriage of the suit was occasioned by the manner in which the issue was framed by the Judge, the costs of appeal should be directed to be costs in the cause.(1) In the case (2) cited their Lordships, while remanding the case, ordered that if the respondent failed to appear in the High Court, or if the appeal should be decided against him, the respondent should pay the appellant's costs of the appeal in England, and the costs (if any) paid under the decree of the High Court were to be repaid to him. When an appeal is heard ex parte in the absence of the respondent and it is dismissed, the respondent is entitled to costs up to, and including, the lodgment of his printed case, and also to the costs of appearance for applying for the same.(3)

Pauper appeal.—In an early case (4) leave to appeal in forma pauperis was granted on an application to the High Court on an unstamped paper, but certified by counsel that there was reasonable ground of appeal. It has been recently held that the High Court cannot entertain an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council in forma pauperis and to be exonerated from depositing the respondent's costs and the usual fees.(5) The question whether it is necessary to apply for leave to prosecute an appeal in forma pauperis in England, although the Courts in India admitted such an appeal, was referred to in Munni Ram v. Sheo Churn.(6)

Appeal pending; effect on rights of owner.—The pendency of an appeal to England does not put the party who, subject to that appeal, is the owner of an estate, under a legal disability to bring a suit in that character against third parties.(7)

Decree.—This term is defined in sect. 2 (2), and under that definition a decree may be either preliminary or final. The distinction between the two is pointed out in the explanation to that section. Under sect. 97, parties aggrieved by preliminary decrees are required to appeal therefrom. Sect. 594 of the last Code ran as follows: "decree includes also judgment and order." (8) Decree now includes a final order. Clauses (a) and (b) of sect. 595 of the last Code spoke of "final decrees." Sect. 109 now speaks of "any decree or final order." Apparently, then, an appeal will lie from a decree which may be either final or preliminary and from an order which is final. This is in accordance with previous decisions. A final decree was always appealable. And the Privy Council held that "final" for this purpose did not mean the last

(8) It has been held that therefore the provision in sect. 588 of the last Code did not restrict the provision in sect. 599 that an appeal might be brought to the King in Council from a final order: Krishna Prasad v. Motichand, 40 I. A. 140; 17 C. L. J. 573 (1913); 17 C. W. N. 637.

decree but a decree determining rights finally, such as a preliminary decree establishing the liability to account and directing accounts to be taken.(1) In the case cited it was said that, to decide whether a decree is final or not, the Court should look at what was the real question before the Court when the decree was made. Where the plaintiff alleged that the defendant was accountable to him upon several claims, and the defendant alleged that he had got legal defences to every one of those claims and that he was not accountable at all, and the Court held that the legal defences put forward were valid as to some of the claims, and as to others of the claims they were invalid and therefore the defendant must account, and passed a decree for account; such a decree directing accounts was held to be a "final" decree under the last Code.(2) "It is true," said Lord Hobhouse, "that the decree that was made does not declare in terms the liability of the defendant, but it directs accounts to be taken which he was contending ought not to be taken at all, and it must be held that the decree contains within itself an assertion that, if a balance is found against the defendant on those accounts, the defendant is bound to pay it. Therefore the form of the decree is exactly as if it affirmed the liability of the defendant to pay something on each one of these claims, if only the arithmetical result of the account should be worked out against him. Now that question of liability was the sole question in dispute at the hearing of the cause, and it is the cardinal point of the suits. The arithmetical result is only a consequence of the liability. The real question in issue was the liability, and that has been determined by this decree against the defendant in such a way that in this suit it is final. The Court can never go back again upon this decree so as to say that, though the result of the account may be against the defendant, still the defendant is not liable to pay anything. That is finally determined against him, and therefore in their Lordships' view the decree is a final one within the meaning of the Code.(3)

An order of remand, where the first Court has disposed of a suit on a preliminary point, is not a final, but an interlocutory decree.(4) But where a remand was made under the wrong section and the order of the High Court decided a cardinal issue in the suit, which could never, while the decision stood, be disputed again, there was held to be a final decree, notwithstanding that there might be inquiries yet to be made in disposing of the suit, e.g. where the High Court, reversing the decree of the first Court, held that a valid bequest was made by a will and remanded the case for the trial of other issues.(1) Where the High Court affirmed the liability of the appellant, which could never be questioned again and was the cardinal point in the suit,(2) an appeal was held to lie.(3) Where a candidate at an examination for pleadership was erroneously declared by a notification in the Government Gazette to be qualified for admission as a vakil of the High Court, but when the mistake was found out the notification was cancelled, on application for leave to appeal, held that Chapter XLV. of the last Code had no application, and that the matter was not one in which the High Court was concerned to give or refuse leave to appeal.(4) Where, after the admission of an appeal to the Privy Council, the Court below passed a judgment in review in the same case, which judgment was sent up and notified to the Council, and put on record in the appeal case, it was held open to the Judicial Committee to pass judgment on the appeal, without prejudice to the subsequent judgment which was passed on review.(5)

Final order.—As regards orders made prior to decree which are only so many steps towards the ultimate decree, they may be styled preliminary or interlocutory, and in this sense not final. By final order is apparently meant an order which terminates the proceedings in favour of one of the parties.(6) In the case cited, Markby, J., said: "I do not know any meaning to the word 'final' which can be applied to orders made subsequent to decree." Sed qu. Such an order cannot, it is true, possess finality in the sense in which that term is opposed to orders which are steps towards the decree, for the decree has ex hypothesi been made, but the order may be final as terminating the particular proceedings in which it is made, and the final character of such orders is recognized in sect. 2 with reference to matters determined under sect. 47, ante.(7) It has been held that the question of finality must be determined with reference to the precise relation in which it stands to the proceedings before the Court.(8) It is not always easy to distinguish between what is a final and what is an interlocutory order. The Court of Appeal (in England) has not attempted to give an exhaustive definition, and the Legislature in the Judicature Act, 1875, sect. 12 has not given such a definition.(9) Sect. 2, clause (2), Explanation, of this Code, says that a decree is final when the adjudication completely disposes of the suit. "No order, judgment, or other proceeding," says Brett, L.J.,(10) "can be final which does not at once affect the status of the parties, for whichever side the decision may be given; so that if it is given for the plaintiff it is conclusive against the defendant, and if it is given for the defendant it is conclusive against the plaintiff." "I conceive," says Fry, L.J., "that an order is final only where it is made upon an application or other proceeding which must, whether such application or other proceeding fail or succeed, determine the action. Conversely, I think that an order is 'interlocutory' where it cannot be affirmed that in either event the action will be determined." When any further step is necessary to perfect an order (1) or judgment, it is not final but interlocutory.(2) A judgment may be either final, or preliminary, or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it, leaving other matters to be determined.(3) An order dismissing a petition, presented under the Indian Companies Act (Act XII. of 1895) for confirmation of the alteration in the Memorandum of Association, on the ground that no such resolution as the law requires has been passed, was held appealable under the former section.(4) The order of a High Court setting aside an order of a District Judge calling on to his own file proceedings pending in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, and directing that the proceedings be remitted to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and that the application presented to that Court may be disposed of, is not a final order,(5) nor is an order refusing to appoint a Receiver in a suit.(6) An order of a High Court setting aside an order of a lower Court refusing to set aside an ex parte decree is a purely interlocutory and not a final order,(7) and so is an order rejecting an application for stay of execution of a decree under appeal.(8) An order under the Rules and Orders merely refusing to re-open a Registrar's report is not final;(9) nor is an order deciding only that the Respondent should be at liberty to sue in formâ pauperis.(10) But an order of the High Court based on the ground that the plaint does not disclose any cause of action against the defendant is a final order within the meaning of this clause;(11) and so is an order setting aside the decision of a lower Court as to the respective shares of the parties to a partnership suit and directing fresh accounts to be taken.(1) The dismissal of an appeal to the Privy Council for want of prosecution is not a final order within the meaning of Art. 179, Sch. II. of the Limitation Act.(2)

Appeal under Letters Patent not falling within the Code.—Where, by an Order in Council, a case was remitted to the High Court with a direction to take an account between the parties on certain principles, and it was further ordered that if, on the taking of the accounts, anything should be found due to the plaintiff, a decree should be made in his favour, and if nothing should be found due to him the suit would be dismissed, and when the case came back to the High Court, a Division Bench took the accounts and made a decree against the defendants; held that sects. 595, 596 of the former Code did not apply to such a case, but a right of appeal to His Majesty in Council might be successfully claimed under clause 39 of the Letters Patent, the amount in dispute being over Rs. 10,000, because it was a final decree of a Division Court of the High Court from which an appeal did not lie to the High Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent. The expression "a Division Court" in sect. 39 (it was held) did not apply only to a Division Court sitting on the original side.(3)

"Passed on appeal."—This does not mean the same thing as any order passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction. So an order rejecting an application to review a judgment passed on appeal is not an order made on appeal from which an appeal lies to the Privy Council.(4) Nor is an order rejecting an application to amend a decree; (5) nor is an order refusing to admit an appeal presented beyond the prescribed period.(6) Two essential elements to be considered in deciding whether an order is one passed in appeal are whether the relationship of a Superior and an Inferior Court exists, and whether the Superior Court possesses the power to review, affirm or modify the decisions.(7) An order passed by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under sect. 115 or its power of superintendence under sect. 15 of the High Courts Act of 1851 is made or passed on appeal within the meaning of this clause.(8)

"In the exercise of original civil jurisdiction."—There is no right of appeal from a decree made by the High Court in the exercise of original jurisdiction, if an appeal will lie to the High Court itself under clause 15; but there is a direct appeal from a decree made in the exercise of original jurisdiction by a Division Bench of two Judges. There is no appeal, under clause 40 of the Letters Patent, to the Privy Council from an interlocutory judgment or order of a Judge of the High Court (e.g. an order for inspection of documents), until such judgment or order has been subjected to an appeal to the High Court, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, except in those cases, in which, by reason of the number of the Judges who have made such order, an appeal under clause 15 is given directly to the Privy Council.(1) There is no appeal against the decision of a High Court passed on appeal from an award of compensation made by the Court to which a reference had been made under sect. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, for such a decision is an award.(2)

"Any decree or order, when the case is certified."—The certificate is given under O. XLVI. r. 3 that the case is "otherwise" a fit one for appeal. This provision is intended to meet special cases where the point in dispute is of importance, though not measurable in money.(3) In all cases below the appealable value an application should be made to the High Court for such a certificate, before application is made for special leave from the Privy Council itself.(4) This clause includes cases where it cannot be said that the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit is Rs.10,000 or upwards, or that the amount or value of the dispute on appeal is of that sum or upwards,(5) where the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance is below Rs.10,000, but the amount or value of the dispute on appeal is Rs.10,000 or upwards (6) and where the matter in dispute is under the appealable value. Where the certificate of the High Court simply said, "Let a certificate be granted that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council, and let the usual notices be issued," it was held to have been given pursuant to sect. 595 (c) and the latter alternative of sect. 600 of the former Code.(7) The discretion vested in the Court by this clause should be sparingly used.(8) This clause is not to be interpreted as restricted to "final orders."(9) by law had been passed, can be certified to be a fit case on the ground that the financial and commercial position of the Company may be seriously affected by the questions at issue, and also that it is of great importance to Indian Companies generally that their rights should be precisely defined on this point. The value of the question at issue between the parties, in such a case, is one to which it is impossible to give a numerical expression.(1) No appeal lies from the judgment of one Judge of the High Court, or of one Judge of a Division Court, or of two or more Judges of the High Court, where they are equally divided in opinion (sect. 111). But in any such case an appeal should be made in the first instance to a Division Bench of the High Court under clause 15 of the Charter, before an appeal can be preferred to His Majesty in Council.(2) The question whether an applicant had established that substantial loss might result to him if execution was not stayed pending the hearing of the appeal presented to the High Court is not a question which would justify a special certificate of fitness under this clause.(3) Sections 47 and 48 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (III. of 1907) do not interfere with any right of appeal to the Privy Council.(4).

Conditions imposed on right of appeal (Sect. 110).—This section requires that in order to give a right of appeal there must be in dispute either directly or indirectly an amount of Rs.10,000. If the decree affirms the Court below, another condition is affirmed, namely that the appeal must involve some substantial question of law. The presence of such a question does not give a right of appeal, when the value is below the mark. The requirement of it restricts the right when the higher decree affirms the lower.(5) When it is laid down that the decree must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of Rs.10,000 in value or upwards, the reference is to suits in existence and not to suits in gremio futuri.(6) The reason for fixing the minimum appealable value is based on the principle of not allowing the litigants, who have not succeeded in the High Courts, to be harassed by further appeals, when there is nothing at stake but small amounts of money.(7) But to meet special cases, not satisfying the conditions mentioned in sect. 110, such for instance as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may be of great public or private importance, an appeal may be granted under sect. 109, clause (c), when the High Court certifies that the case is fit for appeal "otherwise," that is when not meeting the conditions of sect. 100.(1) The mere assent of the respondent to an appeal cannot give to the appellant a right of appeal which the Code does not allow nor can it sustain a certificate which is obviously erroneous.(2) The defendant will not be allowed to make a new case based on grounds which were not urged in the Courts in India nor specified in the petition to the High Court for leave to appeal nor suggested in the reasons contained in the case for the appellant.(3)

"The amount or value."—The section incorporates the provisions of the Privy Council Appeals Act of 1874.(4) This does not mean the value as estimated for the payment of stamp duty, but the real or market value. The stamp duties imposed for fiscal purposes are calculated on a certain rule fixed by law, but the right of appeal depends on the value, which is a matter of fact.(5) The words "The value of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance" do not in any way affect the right of appeal when the real value of the subject-matter is Rs.10,000.(6) The Court has only to look at the value of the question at issue in the litigation.(7) As regards the Court of first instance the section speaks of the value of the subject-matter of the suit, and as regards the appeal to the Privy Council of the matter in dispute. There is a distinction between the two; (8) what is such matter depends on the facts of each case.(9) "And" in the first clause of sect. 110 means "and" and not "or." Thus where the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was below Rs.10,000, held by the Privy Council that this section did not apply, for the case must comply with both conditions to justify the admission of an appeal.(1) To determine the value the decree is to be looked at as it affects the interests of the party prejudiced by it. Where the detriment to the party seeking relief is estimated at less than Rs.10,000, the amount of the matter in dispute in appeal is not of the prescribed value.(2) In suits for partition the value is that amount of the whole estate which it is sought to partition, and not merely of the particular share which one of the parties may claim.(3) The value of mesne profits subsequent to suit is to be taken into consideration in calculating the appealable value.(4) In actions of tort where the damages are at large it is not easy to define the value.(5) In a suit to enforce a mortgage-security the value is the amount claimed if such amount falls short of the value of the mortgaged property, but it is the value of the property if this is exceeded by the amount due under the mortgage.(6) Where the appeal is from the whole decree, and the decree has given an amount, including interest up to the date of the decree, which exceeds Rs.10,000, it is clear that the matter which is in dispute in the appeal must exceed the sum of Rs.10,000; for the question to be tried upon the appeal must be whether the decree is or is not right, viz. whether the decree has or has not properly ordered payment of a sum exceeding Rs.10,000. Where, therefore, at the date of the judgment, the sum which is recoverable is an amount (including interest) exceeding Rs.10,000, there is an appeal to the Privy Council. But interest accruing subsequent to the date of the decree cannot be added by the High Courts in estimating the appealable value, and it is a question for the discretion of the Judicial Committee, whether such interest should be added or not.(7) But the costs of a suit are no part of the subject-matter in dispute, and cannot be used for the purpose of estimating the appealable value; if they were allowed to be added to the principal sum claimed, it would be in the power of every litigant, by swelling the costs, to bring any suit up to the appealable value.(1) If a certificate be granted or leave to appeal given by the proper Court in India in a matter in which they have no jurisdiction, the Judicial Committee will dismiss the appeal as incompetent. But if an appeal is competently made, and it appears to their Lordships after argument, or is admitted at the Bar, that the greater part of it must fail, it is the constant practice of their Lordships to give relief in respect of the portion in which the appellant succeeds, notwithstanding that the subject-matter of that portion of the appeal may be less than the prescribed limit. Thus where a certificate was given in the presence of the parties that the value of the matter in dispute on appeal exceeded Rs.10,000, but the appellant's counsel, being satisfied that the appeal could not succeed as to the whole demand, had by his printed case and at the Bar, confined his argument to the question of a sum below Rs.10,000; held by the Privy Council that the value of the subject-matter on appeal was not reduced below Rs.10,000.(2) It was held in the case of a large number of suits tried together and dealt with in one judgment that inasmuch as although, if each case were taken separately, the value was below Rs.10,000, yet if taken collectively the aggregate reached that amount, and the cases were all dependent upon the same judgment, leave to appeal should be given.(3)

Or the decree must involve "directly or indirectly."—It is not enough that the question decided by such decree is a question of title which may possibly affect the title of persons, not parties to the decree, to property not the subject-matter of the suit in which the decree was passed and concerning the title to which property there is no litigation pending.(4) In a recent case, however, where the value had been over Rs.10,000 in the Court of first instance, and less than that sum on appeal to the Privy Council, but the decision by the Privy Council would involve the validity of an award concerning larger sums, it was held that a certificate should be granted and that it was not necessary that a dispute respecting other property to a value of more than Rs.10,000 should be pending at the time of the application.(5) As to whether such a claim is or is not involved must depend on the circumstances of each case; (6) as to the consolidation of suits, see O. XLVI. r. 4.

the Court below. Can a "decision" be said to be affirmed when, although the "decree" is upheld, the High Court in its judgment disagrees with the findings of the fact of the Court below? There is no definition of the word "decision" in the Code, but this word means the decision of a suit by the Court, or the decree, and not the "judgment," i.e. the statement of the grounds on which the Court makes a decree. Thus, when a decision is affirmed it is not necessary that the Appellate Court should not only affirm the decree made by the Court below, but should also affirm the grounds of fact upon which that judgment was passed. Where an Appellate Court dismissed an appeal, but the reasons given by it in respect of some matters of fact were not the same as given by the lower Court, it was held by the Privy Council that the decree of the lower Court had been affirmed by the Appellate Court. The words "decision of the Court" in this section mean the decree and not the judgment.(1) A petitioner for leave to appeal claimed Rs.77,000 odd as the value of the land taken under land acquisition proceedings. The Collector assessed the value at Rs.28,287; the Judge upheld the Collector's award. On appeal to the High Court (valuing the appeal at Rs.49,000 and odd, i.e. the difference between the Collector's award and the amount claimed) the High Court allowed the petitioner an additional sum of Rs.7000. On an application for leave to appeal it was held that the decree was a decree of affirmance of the first Court's decree, and there being no substantial question of law, leave was refused. In giving judgment the Court said, "No doubt, in one sense it may be said that this Court did not affirm the decision of the Court below. But we must look to the substance of the case.' What is the decree from which the present applicant now desires to appeal to the Privy Council? He desires to appeal only against the decision of this Court so far as it affirmed the decision of the Court below; nothing else. This seems to be, in substance, as far as the subject-matter of appeal goes, a decree of affirmance. If the decree of this Court had been properly drawn, it would have dismissed the appeal except to the extent that the additional sum was given.(2)

"Substantial question of law."—In the first place it must appear that the question is one of law.(3) It does not follow that because it would be such a question in England it is so here. Thus according to English law it is for the Judge and not for the jury to determine what is reasonable and probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution. The jury finds the facts;

the Judge draws the proper inference from the findings of the jury. In that sense the question is a question of law. But where the case is tried without a jury there is really nothing but a question of fact, and a question of fact to be determined by one and the same person. Where the Courts in India come to the same finding about the existence or non-existence of reasonable and probable cause there is a concurrent finding on a question of fact, and no certificate, under sect. 600 certifying that the appeal involves a substantial question of law, should be given.(1) Where no question of law, either as to construction of documents or any other point, arises on the judgment of the High Court, and there are concurrent findings on the oral and documentary evidence, no appeal will be entertained.(2) Where the order allowing leave to appeal ran, "There seems to be a point of law, which, however, does not appear to have been argued here," the appeal was dismissed as the leave was granted contrary to the provisions of the Code.(3) The question of law involved must be a "substantial" (4) one, which in the case cited was suggested to mean a question of great public or private importance.(5) Whether, however, the question is "substantial" or not must depend upon the circumstances of each case, and the reported decisions are of value only as illustrations of the application of the general principle. The construction of a deed of Hebanama was held to be such a question.(6) But the rejection of an application for admission of additional evidence in the Appellate Court is not.(7) The High Court has refused an appeal upon a mere question of practice, such as an order for inspection of documents.(8) Lastly, if there is a point of law, which is also "substantial," it must be "involved" in the appeal. The word "involve" implies a considerable degree of necessity. It does not mean that in certain contingencies a question of law might possibly arise. The practice of the Privy Council is not to interfere with concurrent findings of fact of the Courts below.(9) If the High Court is right in holding that there are concurrent findings of fact, the inference is that the Privy Council will decline to go behind those findings. No doubt it was held by Pontifex, J., (10) that the questions of law referred to were not limited to questions arising out of the facts concurrently found by the Courts below. That view was subsequently accepted by Garth, C.J. and Prinsep, J.,(1) but it seems with some doubt. This view was accepted by Ranade, J., (2) though Jardine, J., refrained from expressing any opinion on the point. But when once it is borne in mind that the last paragraph of sect. 110 has reference to the practice of the Privy Council, it is impossible to say that a question which only arises if the concurrent findings of fact of the Courts in India are disregarded, a question which never can arise so long as the Privy Council maintains those concurrent findings of fact, is a substantial question of law, which the appeal to the Privy Council "involves." (3) Where a discretion is vested in a Court the Privy Council will not allow an appeal against the exercise of that discretion, e.g. no appeal against a mere decree as to costs.(4)

Application for review of judgment.—Save for the words in italics this section corresponds with a portion of sect. 376 of Act VII. of 1859 as modified by a portion of sect. 623 of Act X. of 1877. In Act VIII. of 1859 the clauses (a), (b), and (c) ran "by a decree of a Court of original jurisdiction from which no appeal shall have been preferred to a Supreme Court, or by a decree of a District Court in appeal from which no appeal shall have been admitted by the Sudder Court, or by a decree of the Sudder Court from which either no appeal may have been preferred to Her Majesty in Council, or an appeal having been preferred no proceedings in the suit have been transmitted to Her Majesty in Council." Their present form was given by the Code of 1877 save that by the present section the words "by this Code" have been substituted for "hereby" and "decision" for "judgment." The remaining words in italics are new.

The terms of this section are repeated in O. XLVII. r. 1, where the remainder of sect. 623 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 is given. Order XLVII. substantially contains the provisions of the Chapter on review of judgment in the Codes of 1877 and 1882. See notes to O. XLVII., post.

Revision.—The revisional power has been held to be not an inherent power, but one conferred by statute; and that while a power of superintendence is given to the High Courts over all Courts, the revisional power in the case of each branch of jurisdiction is the creation of separate and distinct legislation.(1) Jurisdiction has been generally divided into original (whether ordinary or extraordinary) and appellate jurisdiction. Differing views have been held upon the question whether the power of revision under this section, and of superintendence under clause 15 of the High Courts Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 104, comes or does not come under the head of appellate jurisdiction.(2) In the former view, the capital distinction is between jurisdiction which is original, and jurisdiction which is not original, irrespective of the circumstances and conditions in which the latter is to be exercised. Appellate jurisdiction may thus be exercised in a variety of forms—as in what is commonly known as appeal, revision, or superintendence.(3) In the latter view, appeal, revision, and superintendence, though distinct from original jurisdiction, come under different heads of jurisdictions—viz. appellate, revisional, and superintending.(4) The Code of 1859 gave the Courts no

It has also been held that a power of revision is not an incident of appellate powers, but, on the contrary, can only be exercised where there is no appeal: Khoja Shivji v. Hasham Gulam, 20 B. 480 (1895). revisional powers. By clause 15 of the High Courts Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 104, which was passed on August 6, 1861, each of the High Courts which were thereafter to be established under that Act were given a power of superintendence over all Courts subject to their appellate jurisdictions. The Presidency High Courts were not established until the issue of their first Letters Patent in 1862; but before that date, Act XXIII. of 1861, which was passed on August 28th of that year, gave in sect. 35 powers of revision in a very restricted form to the Sudder Court. Under that Act, the Sudder Court might call for the record of any case decided on appeal in which no further appeal lay if the Subordinate Court, on hearing the appeal, appeared to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law. When, therefore, the High Courts were established, among the powers vested in it were those of revision given to the Sudder Court under sect. 35 of the Act of 1861, which is the basis of the present section.(1) The power of revision was thus limited to cases decided on appeal where the lower Court had exceeded its jurisdiction.(2)

The question then arose as to the nature of the jurisdiction given by clause 15 of the High Courts Act. It was held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court that the Letters Patent conferred no powers of revision, that in such matters the High Court had only such powers as the Sudder Court had, and that the power of "superintendence" conferred by the High Courts Act gave the Court no revisional power, no power to interfere with or set aside the judicial proceedings of a Subordinate Court, but that clause 15 conferred on the High Court administrative authority and not judicial powers.(3) In a subsequent Full Bench of the same Court,(4) the Judges said that they would prefer not to use the terms "administrative authority" or "judicial powers," or "judicial superintendence," as without giving exhaustive definitions of the words which it might fail to do, the Court might by using them lead to future difficulty, and that each case must be considered as it arose. That the authority of the High Courts under this clause is not merely administrative, appears from a decision of the Privy Council approving the judgment of the Calcutta High Court, which, holding that it could interfere with orders passed without jurisdiction, stayed proceedings on one order and quashed another.(5) There has been, no doubt, a disinclination, and rightly, on the part of some Judges, to rigidly define what they can, or cannot, do by way of their powers of superintendence, which have been said to be very wide.(1) Certain limitations have, however, been laid down which will ordinarily govern the Courts, there being a residue of undefined jurisdiction to which the Court may have recourse in cases of an unusual character.(2)

Sect. 622 of the Code of 1877 was the same as that of the last Code, except that the words "or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally, or with material irregularity," were not in it. It thus extended the power of revision, which was no longer limited to cases decided on appeal, and which might be exercised not only where the Court exceeded its jurisdiction but declined a jurisdiction which was vested in it. Lastly, by sect. 92 of Act XII. of 1879, the words italicised were added; since when the section retained the same form. As regards the amendments now effected, which are of an unimportant character, vide post.

As regards the Charter Act, it has been held that the High Court will interfere where the Court has wrongly declined jurisdiction,(3) or has exceeded its jurisdiction,(4) that is in the first two contingencies mentioned in this section. If, however, the Court has jurisdiction it will not (ordinarily at least) interfere merely because the order passed in such jurisdiction is erroneous either in law or fact.(5) An erroneous decision by a Court having jurisdiction can only properly be corrected by appeal, and if the right of appeal does not exist the same results which an appeal would give cannot be arrived at indirectly.(6) While these rules are of general application in cases of an ordinary character, there is a residue of jurisdiction which the Courts have left undefined. So where the Court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit, but passed a decree therein which was contrary to law and was incapable of execution, the High Court interfered to set matters right.(1) Generally, the High Court will direct a Subordinate Court to do its duty or to abstain from taking action in matters of which it has no cognizance.(2) It will direct it to do that which is legal; and correct that which is illegal in its proceedings,(3) and will correct abuse of powers by a Subordinate Court.(4)

From the above review of the case law it will appear that to a large extent clause 15 and this section cover common ground. In neither case will these extraordinary powers be exercised where matters can be corrected by appeal. In neither case (in that of the Charter ordinarily at least) will the Court interfere in such a way as to give a party the benefit of an appeal when the law says that he is not to have one. In both cases the Court will interfere where jurisdiction is concerned. The section applies also expressly to cases of illegal exercise of jurisdiction and material irregularity. It will therefore be, as regards judicial matters, only necessary to resort to the Charter Act in cases in which the revisional powers given by the Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes do not apply; (5) or where it is doubtful (6) whether they do apply by reason of the nature of the proceedings sought to be corrected; (7) or where the order, passed in proceedings which, considered apart from the matter complained of, are subject to the ordinary revisional powers, is of a very peculiar character; (8) or in cases where the administrative authority of the High Court is required to be invoked. Courts in the exercise of superintending powers will not ordinarily interfere, except in cases of grave and otherwise irreparable injustice.(9)

As regards other revisional jurisdictions, the Bombay High Court has interfered under Reg. II. of 1827 (Bom.).(10) Sect. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX. of 1887) provides that the High Court, for the purpose of satisfying itself that a decree or order made on any case decided by a Court of Small Causes was according to law,(11) may call for the case and pass such order with respect thereto as it thinks fit. the ground that the relationship of landlord and tenant had not been established, and it had been held by a single Judge sitting on the Original Side that (assuming that this refusal was erroneous) the High Court was not justified in interfering under this section, it was held on appeal that the High Court had a right of revision and that this order was a judgment.(1) It is generally agreed that this provision gives no right of appeal either on law or fact; (2) that the exercise of the power given is discretionary,(3) and that the High Court will be slow to interfere when substantial justice has been done, though technically the plaintiff or defendant may have a legitimate ground of attack or defence.(4) It is also established that there is no rule that a Court cannot act under sect. 25, except in cases in which it might act under the present section.(5) The High Court's power of interfering in revision conferred by the Provincial Small Cause Court Act is wider than the power conferred by the present section.(6) The Allahabad High Court has, however, in several cases considered that the discretion to be exercised under sect. 25 should be ordinarily guided by the same considerations as those which governed the application of this section,(7) though a Judge is not absolutely bound to refuse any application under sect. 25, which could not be admitted under the present section.(8) The Bombay High Court, however, has held that the provisions of the present section do not afford a safe guide for the exercise of jurisdiction under the Provincial Small Cause Court Act, since the wording of the two sections is wholly different, that of the Small Cause Court Act being of the widest description and conferring the most ample discretion on the High Court, whilst this section ought to be construed in a restricted and limited sense.(9) What the order should be where the Court determines to interfere must depend entirely on the circumstances of the case.(10) Sect. 48 of the Guardians and Wards Act is subject to the provisions of this section.(11)

High Court.—The power of revision under this section belongs to the High Court only, it being intended that it should be exercised in correction only of such errors as were not open to appeal, and within certain specified limits.(1) Under the Charter Act the Chief Justice determines what Judges shall constitute Benches to hear suits and applications.(2)

"May call for."—The section gives discretionary power to the High Court to interfere or not.(3) In the case cited below,(4) Sir Arnold White, C.J., stating that he "would be glad to find some mode of escape," yet considered that if he was satisfied that the Court of first instance or Court of Appeal had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, he was bound to interfere and exercise the powers conferred by the section. This, however, it is submitted, is not so. The word "may" governs the whole section, and indicates a discretion whether the ground upon which interference is sought is one of jurisdiction or illegality, or material irregularity, and the concluding words are, that the Court may pass such order as it thinks fit. So where an order was passed without jurisdiction, but no objection was taken before the District Court, the High Court declined to interfere, as if it were to set aside the order of the District Court it would have the effect of placing the opposite party in the position of being obliged to bring a suit to establish the right which he claimed, though the period within which he was entitled to bring that suit had elapsed; in other words, it would be placing him under an obligation to bring a suit that primâ facie would be barred under the Limitation Act.(5) So also in an earlier case the Calcutta High Court observed as follows:—"Now, as the order of the Judge in this matter, although passed without jurisdiction, was really a right order, and had merely the effect of getting rid of the decision of the first Court, which was wrong, we think we ought not to make any order in this case." (6)

A fortiori, the same freedom exists as regards illegalities and irregularities. So the High Court, in the under-mentioned case,(7) declined, under the circumstances, to interfere, even though the orders complained of were made irregularly. Thus a Munsif granted a review on a ground on which it was held it could not legally have been granted. His order in review, however, had the effect of making the decree a right, instead of a wrong, decree. The District Judge allowed an appeal from that order on grounds which, having regard to sect. 629

of the last Code, were, it was held, not open to him. On application for revision of this Appellate order, it was held that the proper course was to set aside only the District Judge's order, and to leave standing the order of the Munsif granting a review, which order, though wrong in principle, was, it appeared, right in its results.(1) In an application under this section, the extraordinary jurisdiction is invoked, and the Court must be on its guard against its being abused, merely because the lower Court has fallen into formal error.(2) Again, the Court does not interfere if the result of any irregularity on the part of the lower Court has been to promote the justice of the case.(3) In short, it is this justice of the case and not any mere technicality which will influence the Court's interference. It has been held that the Court cannot interfere under this section on the ground that an order is inexpedient.(4) Assuming that the section applies, the Court is not bound to act under it in every case.(5)

As the power is a discretionary one, the Court may refuse to interfere where there has been laches or delay in moving the Court,(6) inasmuch as delay, unless explained, is evidence of absence of real injury and ground for complaint, and may, where it is considerable, prejudice the position of the opposing party, and if by his laches a party has failed to avail himself of other remedies open to him, he has no claim to invoke the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Court. The Court will, in all cases, regard its exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction as discretional, and subject to considerations of the importance of the particular case, or of the principle involved in it, of delay on the part of an applicant, and of his merits with respect to the case in which the interference of the Court is sought.(7)

The Court will not, as a rule, interfere in revision with an exercise of discretion, though it may not approve of it.(8) It was held that even if a party were not entitled to appeal to have a decree against him set aside, the error of the lower Court could be corrected under this section by a direction to exercise the discretionary powers given by sect. 554 of the last Code.(9)

The High Court can interfere under this section of its own motion, and without an application made to it by a party to the suit.(1) Revisional power has been exercised on the application of a pre-emptor in regard to a sale; (2) of a Collector in regard to an order under sect. 412 of the last Code; (3) and on the report of a District Judge.(4) But the High Court will not interfere on a reference by the Collector with a Mamlatdar's decision in a possessory suit. The aggrieved party can himself apply to the Court.(5)

"Any case."—The matter must be a civil one, and also one in which there is no remedy by way of appeal. Mahmood, J., was of opinion that the word should be understood in its broadest and most ordinary sense, including all adjudications which might constitute the subject of appeal or revision.(6) It has, however, been a matter of dispute whether the section applies to interlocutory orders when there is an appeal from the final decree. The Calcutta High Court has held that there is nothing in this section which prevents the High Court from setting aside an interlocutory order, and that the word "case" is wide enough to include such an order, and the words "records of any case" include so much of the proceedings in any suit as relate to an interlocutory order.(7) The Bombay,(8) Allahabad,(9) and Madras (10) High Courts answer the question in the negative, and in a recent case in the Calcutta High Court the question has been considered doubtful.(11)

It may be that the word "case" is wide enough to include an interlocutory order, but it must be controlled by due regard to the purpose with which this section was framed, which was to enable the party to a suit to get a decision or order of a lower Court rectified where there would otherwise be no remedy. It is on this ground, therefore, that it has been held that an application under this section cannot be entertained in the case of those interlocutory orders against which, though no immediate appeal lies, a remedy is supplied by sect.

591 (now 105), which provides that they may be made a ground of objection in the appeal against the final decree.(1)

The High Court has revised, under this section, proceedings under Reg. of 1806, relating to foreclosure; (2) adjudications under sect. 407 of the last Code; (3) an order under sect. 335 of the same Code, though provisionally final; (4) an order under the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act; (5) an order under sect. 5 of the Religious Endowments Act; (6) an order under sect. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; (7) a lunacy matter.(8) Whether an order under the former sect. 310A was subject to appeal or revision depended on the circumstances of each particular case.(9) A decision under sect. 5 of the Court Fees Act is not a decision in a case within the meaning of this section.(10) The matter of amending a decree does not by itself constitute a "case," but forms part of the proceedings in the suit in which the decree is made.(11) On the same principle, viz. the order being of an interlocutory character only, the High Court has refused to deal with an order relating to an award,(12) though in other cases relating to awards it has interfered.(13) It has been held that an order passed under the Legal Practitioners Act is not a criminal proceeding, nor one within the powers of civil revision.(14) Semble, that it was the intention of the Legislature that the Court which originally heard a case should be the Court to decide whether an application to review its former judgment should, or should not, be granted, and where that Court rejects such an application, its decision should not be open either to appeal or to revision by a higher Court.(15) In a recent Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court, the case of an order passed by a Civil or Revenue Court under sect. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code was considered, and it was held that sect. 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code did not apply, and that the High Court could exercise the powers vested in it by this section and by sect. 15 of the High Courts Act, and that the Bench exercising Criminal Jurisdiction could not (as such) deal with the matter on revision, but could be specially authorized to do so by the Chief Justice under sect. 14 of the High Courts Act.(1) An application under this section to set aside an award is incompetent.(2) A decision of a Subordinate Court on a question of valuation determining the amount of a Court fee is, notwithstanding its declared finality, subject to revision under this section, and sect. 5, Reg. II. of 1827.(3) Proceedings under sect. 206 of the former Code terminated in an order, and could thus be dealt with in revision.(4) Sect. 153 of Act X. of 1859 does not preclude revision by the High Court of an order of a Collector, which is final within the meaning of that section.(5) An application to a Judge of a Presidency Small Cause Court for sanction to prosecute a plaintiff for making a false claim in a suit before him is a case within the meaning of this section.(6)

"In which no appeal lies."—The Court cannot act under this section where there is an appeal,(7) even where the petitioner has to invoke the provisions of sect. 5 of the Limitation Act.(8) The reason of the rule is that there is another and more complete remedy. It is a matter of dispute whether in the case of interlocutory orders, against which there is no immediate appeal, the Court can interfere under this section, seeing that a remedy is supplied by sect. 105, which provides that such orders may be made a ground of objection in the appeal against the final decree. In such cases it is said the appeal is merely deferred.(9) In a recent case it has been doubted whether interlocutory orders come within the scope of this section.(10)

On the same principle it has been held that the Court will not exercise its revisional jurisdiction so long as there is any other remedy open to the petitioner, viz. by regular suit or otherwise.(11) Probably it is more correct to say that there is no absolute rule in the matter such as exists in the prohibition relating to appealable cases; and that while the Court will in general discourage applications under this section when some other remedy has been provided, the exercise of the revisional powers is discretionary according to the circumstances of the particular case. In some cases justice, therefore, may require the Court's interference.(1)

Sect. 588 (now 104), by enacting that the orders passed under it shall be final, only bars appeals from these orders, but does not intend to bar any interference with them by revision.(2)

In some cases, where an appeal was preferred but no appeal lay, the Court has dealt with the case as though an application has been originally made to it under this section, and allowed the appeal to be treated as an application under it.(3) Conversely, a civil revisional petition has been treated as an appeal on the Court fee being paid.(4) It seems reasonable that appellants should be permitted to rely on the provisions of this section without putting them to the expense of making a separate application to get the benefit of it.(5) Some Judges, however, take a stricter and more formal view of the matter, and require a separate and distinct application to be made.(6) It is, as well, therefore, in cases of doubt whether an appeal lies, to file concurrently (7) both an appeal and an application under this section to be heard and disposed of together.

where justice is judicially ministered." A District Registrar is therefore not a Court, and the High Court cannot revise his proceedings.(1)

"Subordinate."—The Court referred to in the words "If the Court" of the former section was a Court other than the High Court. The section therefore did not apply to a case where the order of which review was sought was made by the High Court.(2) It applies to subordinate Courts as the amended section now makes clear. The High Court has jurisdiction under this section over the Presidency Small Cause Courts, and applications can be dealt with by a specially constituted Bench,(3) or, according to the existing rule in the Calcutta High Court, by a single Judge sitting on the Original Side.(4) This section applies to a Mamlatdar's Court in Bombay; (5) and a Court acting under the Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act; (6) and the Court of the Resident at Aden in the exercise of his civil jurisdiction under the Aden Act.(7)

A decision under sect. 5 of the Court Fees Act is not, it has been held,(8) the decision of a Court within the meaning of this section. A District Judge, acting under sect. 23 of the Bombay District Municipal Act Amendment Act (II. of 1884) is not a "Court" under this section, and the High Court has therefore no jurisdiction to revise his order refusing to set aside an election.(9) Neither is a Collector acting under sect. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act "a Court." (10) This section does not apply to a Revenue Court in Madras,(11) or in the North-West Provinces.(12) The High Court at Bombay under clause 29 of the Council Order relating to Zanzibar of the year 1897 has power of revision over all the Civil Courts of Zanzibar.(13)

Jurisdiction.—The word "jurisdiction" is used in two different senses: it may either mean what is ordinarily understood by the term "jurisdiction" —that is, jurisdiction local, pecuniary, personal, or with reference to the subject-matter of a suit; (14) or it may mean the legal authority of a Court to do certain things, to make a particular order in a case over which it has jurisdiction in the sense stated. So if a Court has jurisdiction to deal with an appeal in the former sense, it is only in the latter sense that an erroneous order of remand by an Appellate Court can be treated as an order without jurisdiction.(1) It was held in the case first cited that the word "jurisdiction" is used in the former sense in sect. 578 of the former Code (now 99). In some cases it has been held that the term is used in both senses in the present section.(2) In other cases it has been said that the word "jurisdiction" is used in the first-mentioned sense and refers to the forum for the institution of a suit.(3) It would probably tend to clearness in the law if the word were used in the narrow and more ordinary sense,(4) though, as has been pointed out,(5) the extent to which the restraints attaching to the mode of exercise of jurisdiction should be included in the conception of the jurisdiction itself is a question of nicety upon which there has been considerable difference of judicial opinion. A Judge cannot assume as a matter of law that which in fact has no existence in law, and so give himself jurisdiction. He cannot, by wrongly determining a question, give himself jurisdiction, and the High Court may thus inquire whether such question is rightly or wrongly decided.(6)

On the principle omnia rite acta, the Court will not presume that a Judge has acted without jurisdiction.(7) Indeed, it has on the contrary been said, that unless the facts from which want of jurisdiction on the part of a Subordinate Court may be inferred are patent upon the face of the record, the High Court will not interfere in revision.(8) The High Court may interfere where the lower Court appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law,(9) or to have

Illegality.—The first part of the section down to the words "so vested" deals with jurisdiction. The remainder assumes the existence of jurisdiction, but deals with the mode in which such jurisdiction is exercised. A question may arise whether a Court in the exercise of the jurisdiction it possesses has acted according to law. Such a question relates not to the existence of jurisdiction, but to the exercise of it in either an illegal or irregular manner.(1) This distinction has not always been preserved, it being in some earlier cases considered erroneously that the Privy Council had decided (2) that only questions relating to the jurisdiction of the Court can be entertained under this section.(3) This opinion, however, is not tenable, since it practically treats the additional words added to the section in 1879 as superfluous or unnecessarily introduced.(4) All that the Privy Council case really decides is that this section does not give a right of appeal on questions of law or fact, and that where the Subordinate Court has jurisdiction, the High Court can only interfere where that Court has acted illegally and with material irregularity in the exercise of such jurisdiction.(5)

A Court cannot interfere under this section simply upon the ground that there has been an erroneous decision upon a question of law or fact.(6) A Court that has decided a suit over which it had jurisdiction cannot, only on the ground that it has arrived at a wrong decision, be said to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.(7) Any other view would impose on the Court the duties of a Court of Appeal. Mere errors of law and fact can only be corrected by appeal. Such as a wrong decision on a question of res judicata (1) or limitation,(2) or a merely erroneous construction of the provisions of an Act,(3) or a decision as to the inadmissibility of a document in evidence,(4) or the misconstruction of a document,(5) or a decision that a person was not a legal representative within the meaning of sect. 47, ante.(6) Where a Judge having both Small Cause and ordinary jurisdiction transferred to his file as ordinary Judge a suit filed in his Court as a Small Cause Court suit, it was held that there was not a material irregularity, and that as his decree decided a question of title to immoveable property, the High Court could not interfere under its extraordinary jurisdiction, for since this decree could not have been passed in a Small Cause Court, it was not final.(7)

The mere fact of a Court having come to a wrong decision even on a point of law is not sufficient to constitute an illegality or irregularity; (8) that is, an erroneous decision is not by itself any ground for revision. The Privy Council have thus excluded one class of cases, but it is still left open to consider in what other cases the clause may be applicable.(1) This is a question of difficulty, upon which there has been considerable conflict of opinion. There may be a decision which is erroneous, but not illegal or materially irregular.(2) It is not always easy to draw a clear line between an illegal exercise of jurisdiction and a mistake of law.(3) A distinction has been drawn between an irregular act and an erroneous decision,(4) but the distinction is, ordinarily at least, of little use, as the illegal or irregular act is generally preceded by, and based upon, an erroneous decision.

It is not difficult to give examples of extreme cases. The difficulty exists as to those falling within these limits. Thus, a wrong decision based upon an erroneous construction of sect. 11 that a suit is not barred by res judicata is no ground for revision,(5) but a Judge would act illegally who, while admitting that a case fell within the section, held that as the former decision was erroneous, he would on this ground determine the point again; (6) or if he directed, contrary to the provisions of sect. 60, that in execution of a decree the tools of a judgment debtor be sold.(7) So it has been held that this part of the section contemplates a perverse decision on a question of law or procedure—that is, a decision involving a conscious departure from some rules of law or procedure.(8)

The Calcutta High Court has gone further, and held that while acting with "material irregularity" implies only the committing of an error of procedure, acting "illegally" does not mean the same thing, for Courts may commit gross and palpable errors other than those of procedure which would justify it being said that they had acted "illegally;" and that this part of the section was intended to authorize the High Courts to interfere and correct gross and palpable errors of Subordinate Courts, so as to prevent gross injustice in non-appealable cases; and that it was advisedly expressed in indefinite language from the difficulty of defining exactly the classes of cases which may stand in need of such extraordinary interference. In this view, the question whether any case comes under the clause has to be determined with reference to the grossness and palpableness of the error complained of, and to the gravity of the injustice resulting from it.(9)

Coming to the particular application of the section, the following cases have been expressly held, or may perhaps be considered to have been held, to come under the heading of acting "illegally:"—the rule of adjudication being that a Judge shall decide, secundum allegata et probata, a Judge was held

Irregularity.—Just as in the reported cases, questions of illegality are mixed up with those of jurisdiction, so it is not easy always to distinguish "illegality" from "material irregularity." In fact, as will have been seen from the notes to the last paragraph, the Courts have often spoken of the same act as being both an illegality and irregularity. A distinction has been drawn between cases in which a Judge omits to do something which a Statute enacts shall be done, and cases in which a Judge does something which a Statute says shall not be done. In the former case, the omission may not amount to more than an irregularity in procedure. In the latter, the doing of the prohibited thing is ultra vires and illegal, and without jurisdiction,(14) using the latter term in its broadest sense. It has been said also that material "irregularity" implies only the committing of an error of procedure, whilst acting "illegally" means something more.(15) One thing is clear, namely, that an irregularity is something less than an illegality, and before the Court will interfere it must be shown to be material—that is, an irregularity which has prejudicially affected the merits of the case.

Certain cases of what has been held to be material irregularity will be found noted in the commentary on "acting illegally." Other reported cases are:—determining an issue which does not really arise in the case, and basing the decision on such determination; (1) omissions or errors of procedure in the investigation of a matter, such as the omission to comply with the procedure prescribed by sect. 3 of Act XIX. of 1841, relative to curators; (2) entertaining and granting an application under sect. 108 of the last Code, without notice to the other side, in contravention of the directions of sect. 109 of the same Code; (3) determining a suit upon an issue which was not one on which the dispute between the parties could be properly adjudicated upon; (4) treating delivery of summons by post to a person who was not shown to have been the defendant as good service; (5) Judge and Assessors sitting to determine amount of compensation to be awarded under Land Acquisition Act, and refusing to take into consideration any of the matters prescribed by sect. 24 of that Act, or improperly taking into consideration any of the matters prohibited by sect. 25 thereof; (6) Appellate Court disposing of a suit on a point taken by itself in appeal without affording the parties an opportunity of proving what was necessary to meet that point, or deciding the suit without hearing the parties at all; (7) where evidence has been improperly taken; (8) appointment of a curator under Act XIX. of 1841 without holding inquiry under sect. 3 of that Act; (9) grant of leave under sect. 18 of the Religious Endowments Act on an unverified petition not presented in Court; (10) in contravention of sect. 629, now O. accordance with the findings; (1) ordering the amount deposited to be returned to the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy-holding; (2) failing to decide an issue which became necessary by the reversal of the decision of other issues by the first Court; (3) an order for consolidation of suits which is erroneous in principle and will lead to irremediable mischief; (4) allowing withdrawal of suit under O. XXIII. r. 1, with leave to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action after the defendant had obtained a decree in his favour; (5) interference by a Collector, under sect. 23 of the Mamlatdar's Court Act, with the findings on fact of a Mamlatdar which are on their face legal and regular.(6) It has been held that failure of a lower Appellate Court to frame and try the requisite issue under O. XLI. r. 25 may, under certain circumstances, be a material irregularity.(7) But the mere fact that a lower Court erroneously refused to allow amendment of a plaint is not ground for interference.(8)

"May pass such order."—The words employed indicate very wide powers, and the Court may do or direct anything to be done which it considers called for under the circumstances. The actual order will, however, be controlled by these latter.(9) Where the decision of a Court of first instance, or of both such Court and the Appellate Court, are without jurisdiction, the Court has set aside both decisions and returned the plaint for presentation in the proper Court.(10) In such a case there has been no trial, and the High Court will not undertake the functions of a Court before which the case should have, but has never, gone. Where want of jurisdiction is alleged as regards the Appellate Court only, if the latter Court exceeds its jurisdiction, the High Court may set aside that portion of the order which was in excess of jurisdiction; and if the Appellate Court had not jurisdiction at all, it may set aside the decision altogether, and may refer the appeal to the Court which had jurisdiction, even if it were too late to prefer a fresh appeal to that Court.(11) But if the original order was non-appealable, the Court, in setting aside the decision on appeal of a Court not possessed of jurisdiction, will not enter into the question of the merits in order to determine if the first order was correct or not.(12) It has been held that the Court may at least pass any order which it might be authorized to pass on second appeal.(13) The question, however, whether the High Court, in dealing with a case under this section, can examine the evidence and itself investigate the facts is the object of conflict. In some cases it has done so;(14) in others not.(15)

Execution of orders passed in revision.—The same procedure which applies to High Court decrees in appellate jurisdiction must be applied under sect. 141 to orders in revisional jurisdiction. Application for execution of such orders must be made to the Court whose decree is revised, and that Court must execute the decree or order passed in revision according to the rules prescribed for the execution of its own decrees.(1)

Appeal from orders passed in revision.—The Bombay and Allahabad High Courts have held that the Letters Patent provide for an appeal only from a judgment passed in the original or appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, and that therefore no appeal lies from an order of a single Judge dismissing an application for the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction.(2) The same view was at first taken by the Madras High Court.(3) It was, however, subsequently held, by a Full Bench (proceeding, as regards some opinions of the Judges, on the ground that the revisional is part of the Court's appellate jurisdiction), that an appeal lies against an order made by a single Judge of the High Court under this section, when such order amounts to a judgment.(4) And this case has been recently followed in the Calcutta High Court where it was held on appeal that an order made by a single Judge sitting on the original side interfering with a judgment of the Presidency Small Cause Court is a judgment within the meaning of sect. 15 of the Letters Patent and is appealable. In this case one of the Judges was of opinion that a comparison of the Charter Act, the Letters Patent and the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act leads to the result that the High Court has a right to interfere by way of revision; and another Judge expressed the view that the revisional is a form of the appellate jurisdiction.(5) An order passed under this section, deciding that a certain person should be allowed to sue as a pauper, was held not to be a final decree in an appeal within the meaning of sect. 595 of the last Code, nor a final judgment made on appeal within the meaning of sect. 39 of the Letters Patent; and it was held, on an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against such an order, that the High Court had no power to grant a certificate. Part to apply only to certain High Courts.

117. Save as provided in this Part or in Part X. or in rules, the provisions of this Code shall apply to such High Courts.

Application of Code to High Courts.

High Courts.—It was held that neither under this section nor sect. 638 of the last Code was an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent affected by sect. 588 of that Code.(1) It has been held that sect. 629 (now O. XLVII. r. 7) applied to the High Court.(2)

118. Where any such High Court considers it necessary that a decree passed in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction should be executed before the amount of the costs incurred in the suit can be ascertained by taxation, the Court may order that the decree shall be executed forthwith, except as to so much thereof as relates to the costs; and, as to so much thereof as relates to the costs, that the decree may be executed as soon as the amount of the costs shall be ascertained by taxation.

Provisions not applicable to High Court in original civil or insolvent jurisdiction.

[s. 639.] (2) Nothing in this Code shall extend or apply to any Judge of a High Court in the exercise of jurisdiction as an Insolvent Court.

Original jurisdiction.—See note to sect. 117, ante, and to Preamble. It has been held that in this section the word "ordinary" has been omitted before "original civil jurisdiction." (2)

Insolvency.—The words in the Code of 1877 were slightly different, but their meaning was the same.(3) The Insolvency Court has nothing to do with the procedure to be followed in the execution of a judgment entered up under sect. 86 of the Insolvent Act. The execution itself is a proceeding of the High Court, and sect. 649 of the last Code applied.(4)

Rules.—These sections effect the most important difference between the present and the last Code. Under the law as it formerly stood High Courts had power to make rules to regulate the procedure of the original side of the Court, and High Courts and Chief Courts had power to make rules to regulate the procedure of Courts subordinate to them; but neither High Courts nor Chief Courts could make rules to regulate any matters which were dealt with by the Code of Civil Procedure, nor could they in any way affect the provisions of that Code. The power which is given to the High Court in England and other countries was denied to the High Courts in India, with the result that there could be no elasticity in matters of procedure which fell within the ambit of the Code, and that defects in the existing practice could only be remedied, when discovered, by the dilatory process of legislation.

This may have been proper at the time the Code was first enacted, but it has been rightly considered that there is no reason nowadays for denying to the High Courts the power to regulate these minor matters of procedure, a power which they are far more competent to exercise than the Legislature. In the present Code, therefore, the Legislature has enlarged the rule-making powers of the High Courts and Chief Courts, and vested in them the authority to make changes in minor matters of procedure. This is done by placing the sections of the Code relating to these matters in the first Schedule, and giving to the High Courts and Chief Courts power to vary or amend the rules in the Schedule, or to make additional rules on matters which are specified in the Code. The result follows, that the rules in the Schedule provide a procedure for the present, but that that procedure can be altered at any time, and from time to time as seems fit to the Courts. It has been thought desirable that in exercising these wider powers the Courts should have the advice of representatives of the two branches of the legal profession, and accordingly it has been provided that rules should only be made after taking the opinion of a Rule Committee composed of three Judges of the High Court, a Judge of a subordinate Civil Court, and of three other members appointed by the respective Chief Justices or Chief Judges, one representing the Bar, the other the Vakils or Pleaders, and the third the attorneys. It was believed that a Standing Committee of this kind would be of great value. Provision has been made for the appointment of a permanent Secretary to conduct the routine work of the Committee, and, as is hoped, to assist in drafting rules for them.

The division between matters which should be dealt with in the Act and matters which should be left to rules is not easy to determine on any logical basis.

Matters which affect more than one province, and matters in which it is essential that there should be uniformity in all provinces, have been kept in the Act: minor matters have been relegated to the Schedule. But between these two classes there are many matters as to which opinions may differ whether they are proper subjects for rules or not. It is probably impossible to devise an arrangement which would disarm all criticism; but that adopted in the Code is the best that presented itself at present. It may be said against this innovation that it will create divergence of practice between the various provinces and that this will cause confusion. The answer which has been given is that the divergence will be only in minor matters: and that even in this divergence there may be advantages. The conditions and requirements of provinces differ greatly. A rule of procedure which may be proper in Calcutta may be entirely inappropriate in the Punjab. It is desirable that the general principles of procedure should be uniform all over India, but no harm can result from a divergence in the practice in Judges' Chambers, or in the particular form of plaints or interrogatories.

It may also be objected that the plan of putting some of the provisions relating to any particular subject in the Act and others in rules will lead to confusion. This is an objection which applies to all rules made under statutory authority: but it is one which it is hoped will have little force in this particular case as soon as practitioners have become familiar with the altered system.

The rules suggested in the Schedule to the draft will be found to depart to no very considerable extent from the last Code, though important amendments have been made. The subjects of counterclaim and garnishee orders, which were included in the earlier Bill, have been omitted from the Schedule. They raise questions on which there was a great divergence of opinion, and on which the requirements of different provinces appeared to vary. It has therefore been thought better not to make these procedures compulsory all over India, but to leave it to the Courts of each province to introduce them by rules if thought advisable. Power is given in the rule-making section for these purposes. With sect. 122, compare first paragraph of sect. 652 of last Code, with sect. 128, O. III. r. 6, and with sects. 129–131, the second, third, and fourth paragraphs respectively of sect. 652 of the last Code. New rules published since the date of the last edition are collected in the Appendix.

High Court rules.—These sections correspond with certain modifications with the second, third, and fourth paragraphs of sect. 652 of the last Code. The second paragraph of that section was added by sect. 63, Act VII. of 1888, and the last two paragraphs by sect. 2, Act XIII. of 1895. Rules made and published under this section have the force of law. Hence, it was held that where an application for execution was not accompanied by a copy of the decree of which execution was sought, the application could not be treated as a step in aid of execution within the meaning of the Limitation Act.(1) The rule must not, however, be ultra vires,(2) and no rule, it was held, could add to or modify the conditions and limitations of the law laid down in the Limitation Act.(3) It has been recently said by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that, until such new Rules are made, it is probable that the Rules made under the last Code should be considered as in force.(4) As regards paragraph (1) of sect. 652 and the High Courts, see sect. 122, ante.

PART XI.

MISCELLANEOUS.

132. (1) Women who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court. [s. 640.]

Exemption of certain women from personal appearance.

(2) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to exempt such women from arrest in execution of civil process in any case in which the arrest of women is not prohibited by this Code.

Women.—This is the only section which deals with the exemption of women (1) from personal appearance in Court. The privilege is limited to the class of persons described in the section, and cannot be claimed by all women of rank.(2) It has been designed for the protection of purdanashin. The words "who according to," etc., were held not to apply to a case of a Parsi widow, who alleged that according to Parsi customs she could not leave her house for two years after her husband's death, the custom being of a varying and uncertain character.(3) But a Court, independently of the section, would always have regard to such circumstances as were put forward in that case (viz. the alleged custom, age, and health of the applicant, and her desire to leave the jurisdiction) as an excuse for non-attendance.(4) See notes to O. XVIII. r. 4 and O. XXVI. r. 1.

133. (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, exempt from personal appearance in Court any person whose rank, in the opinion of such Government, entitles him to the privilege of exemption. [s. 641.]

Exemption of other persons.

(3) Rustomji v. Banoobai, 14 B. 584 (1889).

(4) Ib.

(2) The names and residences of the persons so exempted shall, from time to time, be forwarded to the High Court by the Local Government and a list of such persons shall be kept in such Court, and a list of such persons as reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of each Court subordinate to the High Court shall be kept in such subordinate Court.

(3) Where any person so exempted claims the privilege of such exemption, and it is consequently necessary to examine him by commission, he shall pay the costs of that commission, unless the party requiring his evidence pays such costs.

Exemption from appearance.—Act VIII. of 1859, sects. 22, 23. The exemption is absolute, and not limited to cases in which the party claiming it has been summoned by the opposite party. A Rajah instituted a suit under Act X. of 1859 through an agent appointed in that behalf. The Deputy-Collector, not being satisfied with the information which the agent could give, adjourned the hearing to a subsequent day, and required the personal appearance of the Rajah. The Rajah claimed to be exempted; but the Deputy-Collector refused the application, and dismissed the case. It was held that the Rajah was not bound to attend, and the suit was wrongly dismissed.(1)

Arrest other than in execution of decree.

134. The provisions of sections 55, 57 and 59 shall apply, so far as may be, to all persons arrested under this Code.

[s. 642.]

Exemption from arrest under civil process.

135. (1) No Judge, Magistrate or other judicial officer shall be liable to arrest under civil process while going to, presiding in, or returning from, his Court.

(2) Where any matter is pending before a tribunal having jurisdiction therein, or believing in good faith that it has such jurisdiction, the parties thereto, their pleaders, mukhtars, revenue-agents and recognized agents, and their witnesses acting in obedience to a summons, shall be exempt from arrest under civil process other than process issued by such tribunal for contempt of Court while going to or attending such tribunal for the purpose of such matter, and while returning from such tribunal.

(3) Nothing in sub-section (2) shall enable a judgment-debtor to claim exemption from arrest under an order for immediate execution or where such judgment-debtor attends to show cause why he should not be committed to prison in execution of a decree.

(1) Juggut Inder v. Soorjcoomar Chowdhree, Marsh. 627 (1864).

Exemption from arrest.—The privilege is not that of the person mentioned and for his personal benefit, but of the Court, and is conferred for the purpose of ensuring the due administration of justice.(1) A case not governed by this section must be determined upon the principles of English law, on which this section rests.(2) The validity of a commitment by a Court of inferior jurisdiction can be inquired into, and if it be found that a person was, when committed by such Court, entitled to privilege from arrest he will be released.(3) Where plaintiff, a resident of Bengal, went to Madras on the 24th October to attend a case which, however, was adjourned for seven weeks on the 27th October, and while waiting in Madras for the suit to come on was arrested on the 10th November, he was directed to be released.(4) In a suit under Chapter XXXIX. of the last Code (see now Order XXXVII.), when the defendant is not allowed to defend without leave, a defendant appearing in Court for that purpose is privileged.(5) If there is no bona fides on the part of that person that his attendance is required he has no privilege.(6) The privilege being that of the Court, he cannot, when arrested for contempt, claim privilege.(7) The privilege attaches only when going to, or attending, or returning from a tribunal. Therefore, where an insolvent who was wrongly imprisoned was arrested on his release from jail, it was held that he could not claim privilege.(8)

"Tribunal" is a comprehensive term intended to cover Criminal as well as Revenue and Civil Courts; (9) Insolvency Courts; (10) and arbitrators.(11) The words of the section are now as under the last Code not "from arrest under the Code," but from arrest "under civil process." (12)

Procedure where person to be arrested or property to be attached is outside district.

136. (1) Where an application is made that any person shall be arrested or that any property shall be attached under any provision of this Code not relating to the execution of decrees, and such person resides or such property is situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which the application is made, the Court may, in its discretion, issue a warrant of arrest or make an order of attachment, and send [s. 648.]

to the District Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such person or property resides or is situate a copy of the warrant or order, together with the probable amount of the costs of the arrest or attachment.

(2) The District Court shall, on receipt of such copy and amount, cause the arrest or attachment to be made by its own officers, or by a Court subordinate to itself, and shall inform the Court which issued or made such warrant or order of the arrest or attachment.

(3) The Court making an arrest under this section shall send the person arrested to the Court by which the warrant of arrest was issued, unless he shows cause to the satisfaction of the former Court why he should not be sent to the latter Court, or unless he furnishes sufficient security for his appearance before the latter Court or for satisfying any decree that may be passed against him by that Court, in either of which cases the Court making the arrest shall release him.

(4) Where a person to be arrested or moveable property to be attached under this section is within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal or at Madras or at Bombay, or of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, the copy of the warrant of arrest or of the order of attachment, and the probable amount of the costs of the arrest or attachment, shall be sent to the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay or Rangoon, as the case may be, and that Court, on receipt of the copy and amount, shall proceed as if it were the District Court.

Under any provision of this Code.—It was held that this section did not authorize the Court to attach any property which it was not authorized to attach by other sections of the Code.(1) It has, however, been held by the Calcutta High Court that under this section of the last Code, read with sect. 483 of the same Code, the Court could attach property outside the jurisdiction; in other words, that this section was intended to extend the operation of attachments before judgments to property beyond the jurisdiction.(2)

Resides.—The intent of this special provision must be regarded. Bare residence is sufficient under this section. So where an officer, whose regiment was in Burmah, proceeding on leave to England, resided a few days at Madras, it was held that he was liable to arrest under this section.(3)

Language of subordinate Courts.

(2) The Local Government may declare what shall be the language of any such Court and in what character applications to and proceedings in such Court shall be written.

138. (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct with respect to any Judge specified in the notification, or falling under a description set forth therein, that evidence in cases in which an appeal is allowed shall be taken down by him in the English language and in manner prescribed. [s. 185A.]

Power for Local Government to require evidence to be recorded in English.

(2) Where a Judge is prevented by any sufficient reason from complying with a direction under sub-section (1), he shall record the reason and cause the evidence to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court.

Evidence in English.—The section corresponding with this rule in the last Code, was inserted by Act VII. of 1888, sect. 17. As to Oudh, see Act XVIII. of 1876, sect. 19. Clause (3) is now O. XVIII. r. 7. Clause (4) of the corresponding section in the last Code has not been re-enacted.

[s. 647.] 141. The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction.

Miscellaneous proceedings.

Procedure for miscellaneous proceedings.—The object of this section, which corresponds with sect. 38, Act XXIII. of 1861, is to make applicable to proceedings other than suits and appeals, the procedure, so far as it is applicable, which is adopted in suits and appeals. An appeal, however, is a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure. This section, therefore, does not confer any right of appeal where it does not exist under the Code or any other law.(1) The right of appeal must be given by statute conferring that right.(2) If, however, a right of appeal is given by law, then the procedure in such appeal will be that laid down by the Code.(3)

Proceedings other than suits.—The procedure applicable during the hearing of the suit until decree is provided for by the Code; as also that applicable in execution of or appeal from the decree. This section in the last Code did not on its true construction apply to execution of the decree, and was inapplicable to petitions for execution, before, and independently of, the passing of sect. 4, Act VI. of 1892, which amended it, by expressly declaring that it was not applicable to such cases.(4) Prior, however, to the Amending Act it had been held, in a number of cases, that all execution proceedings should, for the purposes of this section, be treated as miscellaneous proceedings.(5)

All such cases, in so far as they proceed upon the ground that this section of the last Code was applicable to execution proceedings, must be considered both as overruled by the Privy Council and superseded by the Amendment of 1892 introducing the Explanation. Under the Code, as it stood after the introduction of the Explanation to s. 407 of the last Code, this section does not apply to execution proceedings.(1) The Amending Act, VI. of 1892, by making this section inapplicable in proceedings for the execution of decrees, deprived the Civil Courts of the power to apply by analogy to proceedings for the execution of decrees, the procedure specifically prescribed for proceedings in suits at a stage prior to decree, and limited the procedure which could be applied under the Code in proceedings for execution to the procedure which is expressly, as in Chapter XIX. of the last Code, or by implication, prescribed for proceedings for execution, or at the execution stage of a suit.(2) The explanation has now been omitted, but presumably the law remains the same.(3) It has recently been held by the Calcutta High Court that the explanation was only omitted because it had been rendered superfluous by the decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir-ullah.(4)

Chapter XIX. of the last Code did not, however, contain a complete procedure for proceedings in execution,(5) and where this was the case the matter might have been disposed of under the inherent power of the Court.(6) Thus it was held that a Court had inherent power, if not conferred by statute, to dismiss an application for execution when the applicant fails through his own laches to put the Court in a position to proceed with his application; as also to proceed forthwith to decide an application for execution of a decree on the materials before it, when time has been granted to a party to perform any act necessary for the further progress of the application, and that act has not been done.(1) So again, if a Judge makes an ex parte order in execution proceedings, except in cases in which he is expressly empowered to make such an order, the party who has not been heard has a right to apply to the Judge to set it aside, and if the Judge finds that such order was wrong, he is at liberty, after hearing both parties, to recall the same.(2) Applications for execution are, of course, proceedings in the suits in which the decrees were made.(3)

No. 62. The case of Tukaram v. Khandu, 20 B. 541 (1895), is not against this view as the decision proceeds upon the ground of the Courts' inherent power in a matter of this kind. A similar view of the section was taken in an early case: In re Jodoo Monee Dossee, 11 W. R. 494 (1869).

The miscellaneous provisions to which this section was intended to apply are, it has been said, "matters, such as application for probate,(4) certificates of guardianship,(5) or to collect debts, which, especially when contested, partake of the nature of suits and to which the procedure laid down in the Code is clearly more or less applicable." (6) It has also been held applicable to proceedings under the Divorce Act; (7) to matters of procedure in the revenue Courts not specially provided for; (8) to proceedings before the Judge under the Registration Act; (9) a preliminary inquiry into the conduct of a Civil Court Ameen; (10) applications to the High Court for the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction under Reg. II. of 1827; (11) proceedings under sect. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; (12) matters relating to companies; (13) applications under sect. 18 of the Religious Endowments Act,(14) and other similar matters other than suits and appeals. It has also been held that the provisions of sect. 100 of the last Code were applicable to proceedings for the restoration to the file of a case dismissed for default.(15) It does not, however, appear why these proceedings which were in a suit were treated as miscellaneous.

Application for restitution.

(2) No suit shall be instituted for the purpose of obtaining any restitution or other relief which could be obtained by application under sub-section (1).

Restitution on reversal or variance of decree.—It is the legal effect of a decree that it is to be executed. It is no less the effect of a decree of reversal that the party against whom the decree was given is to have restitution of all that he has been deprived of under it. On the reversal of a judgment the law raises an obligation on the party to the record who received the benefit of the erroneous judgment to make restitution to the other party for what he had lost, and it is not merely in the power of the Courts but it is a duty cast upon them to enforce that obligation. It is not a mere matter of discretion with the Court which reverses a decree whether the party against whom it was given is or is not to be restored to what he has been deprived of under it.(1)

The Code of 1859 did not expressly provide for restitution.(2) The Privy Council, however, held that the Courts had an inherent power in this respect, and that property taken under an erroneous decree was on its reversal recoverable either by summary process of execution of the appellate decree of reversal or by a new suit.(1)

The Court has, independently of the statutory power conferred on it, an inherent (2) power in this respect. It is both its right and duty to prevent its proceedings being made the cause of injustice and therefore to order the restitution of the thing improperly taken, and generally to restore the party to the position he would have occupied but for its erroneous order since reversed. The Codes, subsequent to that of 1859, provided for restitution, and the cases under them extended the operation of the words of the Statute as defined in the present amended section. The first clause of the section has been re-cast, so as to bring it into closer conformity with the existing practice, and the second clause has been added.

It is immaterial whether the erroneous action of the Court was due to carrying into effect a wrong decree or whether it was due to execution proceedings wrongly conceived for the purpose of carrying out a right decree. In either case the Court, upon the error being ascertained, is bound, so far as it can, to place the aggrieved party back in his original position, and to take means not merely to restore to him the property of which he had been wrongly deprived, but also to give him compensation for such loss as he had thereby sustained. It is competent to the Court in the course of the execution proceedings to afford the aggrieved party this remedy in full.(3) Where a claimant under the former section elected to put forward his claim to mesne profits in execution proceedings, and the claim was dismissed and he acquiesced in the dismissal and did not appeal, the order of dismissal was held a bar to further proceedings in respect of the same claim, so long as it remained unreversed.(4)

The High Court of Calcutta has power under clause 15 of the Charter to order the Court of first instance to enforce restitution of the amount realized from the defendant in excess of the amount allowed by the Court of Appeal, and also to execute that part of the decree which awarded costs to the defendant.(5)

The High Court made an order dismissing an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council with costs:—Held, that though there was no section in the Code directly applicable to the case, yet by analogy to this section the proper Court to execute the order as to costs was the lower Court.(1)

The section was held applicable by analogy to proceedings before Courts of Revenue.(2) It has been held that the principle of this section cannot be extended to the case of a decree which has been set aside under sect. 108 of the last Code (now represented by O. IX. r. 13), for such a decree cannot be revived by any subsequent proceeding.(3)

"Decree."—The former section provided for restitution to which a party was entitled under a decree passed in appeal under Chapter XLI. of the last Code. It was held therefore not to apply where the benefit claimed was not granted in an appeal, but in a review setting aside the decree of the Appellate Court itself.(4) But in such a case the Court might, in the exercise of its inherent power, or treating the application as one for execution of the decree passed on review, order restitution.(5) Nor on the same grounds did the section apply where the decree under which the benefit was sought was an order of the Privy Council,(6) though the principle embodied in it did.(7) The qualifying words "passed in an appeal under this Chapter" have been now omitted. But it has been held that this section only applies to a case where a party is entitled to a benefit by way of restitution or otherwise under a decree passed in an appeal.(8) The decree to be executed is the final decree whether that decree reverses, modifies, or affirms the decree of the lower Court.(9)

"Varied or reversed."—As to the legal effect of such variance or reversal, see first paragraph.

Money recovered under a decree or judgment cannot be recovered back whilst the decree or judgment under which it was recovered remains in force; but this rule of law rests upon this ground, that the original decree or judgment must be taken to be subsisting and valid until it has been reversed or superseded by some ulterior proceeding. If it has been so reversed or superseded the money recovered under it ought certainly to be refunded. The true question in such cases is, whether the decree or judgment under which the money was originally recovered has been reversed or suspended.(10) The supersession to which their Lordships of the Privy Council were referring in this case must be a superseding by a decree of a Court which had competent jurisdiction to reverse the decree under which the money had been paid, if it had been brought before it. Thus, if there had been no order made at all for commutation of rent in kind into a fixed money rent, but a Court of Revenue had erroneously made a decree for money rent, and that decree had been executed and was not reversed in appeal or superseded by a Court competent to reverse it (though set aside by the Board of Revenue, but as the appeal lay to the Judge and not to the Board of Revenue, the Board of Revenue was not a competent Court), a tenant, whose goods had been sold in execution of such decree for rent, or who had satisfied that decree by payment, could not, it was held, recover so long as the decree for rent was not reversed or superseded by a Court competent in that respect.(1) When a main decree, which is the basis of subsequent decrees, is reversed, these latter, being subordinate and dependent decrees, are superseded, although they remain unreversed.(2) As to the effect of reversal on third party purchasers, vide post.

"The Court of first instance."—Where an order of a District Judge was set aside or modified by the High Court on appeal, application under the former section should, it was held, be made to him and not to the Subordinate Judge (Court of first instance), whose order was modified by the District Judge.(3) The jurisdiction of such a Court continues in all matters in execution, and is not ousted by the circumstance that the value of the question in execution exceeds the limits of suits within the Court's original cognizance.(4) The ground of the former decision, however, was that under the last Code application had to be made to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred. But now apparently in all cases application must be made to the first Court.

"Shall."—There is no discretion. See notes in first paragraph and cases there cited. Under the terms of the last Code upon an application for restitution, the Court which passed the decree had to proceed to execute the appellate decree "according to the rules heretofore prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits." It was held that such applications were proceedings in execution of the decree, and as regards limitation were governed by Art. 179 of the Limitation Act.(5) Though the Calcutta High Court took the view that the Code made no provision for transfer of execution proceedings from one Court to another,(6) the other High Courts did not follow it.(7) Though the words italicized do not occur, presumably their substance is still in force.

"Any party."—The Allahabad High Court held that the former section applied only to parties to the proceedings in the suit, and in the appeal, and not to assignees of interests of the parties to the suit when these assignees had not been made parties to the suit or the appeal,(1) and that the assignee could not be compelled by separate suits to repay the money he had received.(2) It has, however, been recently ruled that the section must be read with sect. 244 (now 47) of the former Code, and therefore the assignee of the decree of the Appellate Court which reversed the decree appealed against, being the representative of the party in whose favour the appellate decree is passed, is entitled to apply for restitution.(3)

"Entitled."—The procedure laid down is not confined to cases in which the restitution desired is provided for in the decree itself.(4) This was held, notwithstanding the words "under a decree" which have been now omitted.

It has, however, been held that no one is entitled (5) to restitution if there is no decree in his favour. Thus when a certain sum claimed as rent was paid into Court by the defendant and made over to the plaintiff after he got a decree from the lower Appellate Court, but the lower Appellate Court's judgment was set aside on second appeal by the second defendant, it was held that the first defendant was not entitled to restitution.(6) But a person entitled to restitution cannot, after getting back his property, retain any amount of money, which formed a portion of the sale proceeds of the property which had been restored, and which had been withdrawn by him before the setting aside of the erroneous decree under which the property was sold. The auction-purchaser may bring a suit for the recovery of the money retained by the party to whom the property has been restored.(7)

This power is subject to the following limitations. When a decree is reversed on appeal the person entitled to restitution is entitled to the restoration of his property (if the judgment-creditor himself was the purchaser), and not merely to the proceeds of the sale thereof.(5) For when a decree-holder purchases under his own decree, and that decree is afterwards reversed on appeal, he is not entitled to the benefits of the execution proceeding and the sale thereunder.(6) But in order not to lessen the inducement to purchase at execution sales the rule is that a sale in execution at which a third party becomes the purchaser is upheld notwithstanding the subsequent reversal of the decree.(7) A third party, however, is not protected merely because he is a stranger when grounds for setting aside a sale under sects. 244 or 311 of the last Code (now

When an application for probate of a will is refused by the District Court, but granted by the High Court on the ground that the will was proved, it is the duty of the Lower Court to prepare and issue a probate or copy of the will under the seal of the Court under the section.(3)

"No suit shall be instituted" (clause (2)).—There has never been any question but that restitution can be obtained in execution of the final decree of the Appellate Court.(4) Prior, however, to this Code it was a matter of conflict whether an alternative remedy lay also by way of a separate suit. In some cases this was considered to be so,(5) in others it was held that such a suit was prohibited (6) by sect. 244 of the last Code. The second clause now expressly prohibits a suit.

Security for restitution.—When the Appellate Court has seizin of the appeal, it has an inherent power over the subject of litigation, the nature of which is indicated and implied by this section, and can in the exercise of that power, and notwithstanding that the decree has been executed, call upon the respondent to furnish security for the due performance of any decree which may be made.(7) Where any person had become surety for the restitution of any property taken in execution of a decree it was held by the Bombay,(8) Madras,(9) and Allahabad (10) High Courts that the security bond could be enforced in execution of that decree. The Calcutta High Court,(11) however, held that a separate suit was necessary. The former view has now been adopted in sect. 145, as that amended section (which replaces sect. 253 of the last Code) now makes special provision in clause (b) for the case.

Provided that such notice in writing as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety.

Execution against surety.—This section corresponds with sect. 204 of Act VIII. of 1859, save that the portions in italics were added by the present Code and the last clause added by sect. 253 of Act X. of 1877. By the latter Act the section was limited to sureties who had become liable "before the passing of a decree in an original suit." That limitation has been removed by the present Code.

The section applies to sureties in respect of applications for arrest and attachment before judgment under sects. 479 [O. XXXVIII. r. 2] and 484 [O. XXXVIII. r. 6].(1) It does not prevent a surety being sued on his bond, but gives an additional remedy against him.(2) A surety objecting to his liability being enforced under this section on the ground that he became liable after the decree, should object under sect. 278 [O. XXI. r. 58], and not under sect. 311 [O. XXI. r. 90].(3) Under the Codes of 1877 and 1882, by which the operation of this section only affected sureties who had become liable before the passing of a decree in an original suit, it was held that this provision did not apply to persons becoming sureties after decree; (4) such as where, after decree, its terms were varied and provision made for its payment by instalments, and for the payment of a portion of which a surety became liable under sect. 244 of Act VIII. of 1859,(5) but that it did apply to a decree of the P.C. and sureties for the costs of appeal; (6) as also sureties for the performance of any appellate decree that might be passed; (7) and that it only referred to cases where security has been given before the decree (in this particular case an appellate decree),(8) and given during the pendency of a suit or appeal, and not where security was given after the first appeal was decided and before the Limitation.—Previous applications for execution against the judgment-debtor will not take an application against the surety out of limitation, Art. 179 of Shed. II. of the Limitation Act not being applicable.(1)

Appeal.—An appeal, it has been held, lay from an order enforcing a claim against a surety under the former section.(2)

Enlargement of time.

Enlargement of time.—In examining the provisions of the Bill, the attention of the Select Committee was directed to a number of clauses in which power was given to the Court to fix a period or to give or allow time for the performance of any act by a party. On the strength of the facts underlying reported decisions, the clauses were expanded to make it clear, in some cases that the period or time may be extended, and in others that this power of extension may be exercised even though the original period of time has expired. The Committee were of opinion that uniformity in this matter was of importance, because it might not impossibly be argued that the express conferment of these powers in certain cases negatives them by necessary implication in others. This difficulty has been sought to be removed by the general enactment contained in Saving of inherent powers of Court.

151. Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court.

Inherent jurisdiction.—This is an extremely important section, expressly recognizing as it does the inherent jurisdiction of the Courts, a matter which is fully dealt with in the notes to the Preamble. In addition to the cases there cited it may be noted that it has again been quite recently held that the Code is not exhaustive, and that when the Court has jurisdiction to make an order it has (although there may be no section of the Code applicable) inherent power to have that order carried into effect.(6) It has been held that the Courts in India have an inherent power to amend or vary decrees so as to bring them in accordance with the judgments after they are signed by the Judges, even if they do not fall within this section.(7) Where, owing to the death of the plaintiff before the date fixed for the hearing, there was no appearance, and the suit was dismissed for default, it was held that the mistake inadvertently made in so dismissing it could be rectified under this section and (apart from it) under the inherent power.(8) But where, according to established principles, certain questions have been removed from the jurisdiction of a Court, they cannot be brought within it on the plea that the Court has inherent power to do what justice requires for the parties before it.(9) An order for consolidation of suits can be made under this section.(10)

Repeal.—The ordinary rule of construction of Statutes gives them a future operation only, unless the legislative intent appears clear from their terms that they are to have a retrospective operation. This presumption against retrospective operation does not, however, exist in the case of enactments relating to procedure, including pleadings, practice, and evidence. In fact, the general principle is that alterations in procedure are always retrospective in effect, and apply to pending proceedings unless there be a declared intention to the contrary or good reason against it. When the effect of an enactment is to take away a right, then it does not primâ facie apply to existing rights; but when it deals with procedure only, primâ facie, it applies to all actions pending as well as future.(2) There is, however, a distinction between "relief" and the mode or procedure for obtaining such relief. The "relief" remains unaffected by a change of procedure.(3) The intention to take away a vested right (including a right of suit) is not to be imputed to the Legislature unless it is expressed in unequivocal terms.(4)

(1) It was pointed out in District Munsif of Tiruvallur (in re) (F. B.), 37 M. 17 (1914), that this is an enabling (and not a repealing) section.

R. 126 (1871), as follows: "Rights already acquired shall not be affected by the retroaction of a new law. Rules as to procedure are an exception. The law as to the acquisition of rights is that prevailing at the period of the arising of the matters of fact which generate them. Their enforcement must be according to the rules of process at the period of suit." But, as there pointed out, the practical difficulty lies in the application of the principle and in distinguishing between material and processual laws. See also Hukm Chand, 41.

Parties to Suits.

1. All persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where, if such persons brought separate suits, any common question of law or fact would arise. [s. 26.]

Who may be joined as plaintiffs.

2. Where it appears to the Court that any joinder of plaintiffs may embarrass or delay the trial of the suit, the Court may put the plaintiffs to their election or order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient.

Power of Court to order separate trials.

3. All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise. [s. 28.]

Scope of the English and Indian rules.—Sects. 26–32 of the last Code were first incorporated in Act X. of 1877 from the various rules of Order XVI., framed under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873. Sect. 26 was substantially the same with Rule 1 of the Order, as it stood at the time of the enactment of the Code, with the exception that that rule did not contain the words "in respect of the same cause of action." The rule was construed very broadly in the earlier cases, and held to justify a joinder of plaintiffs having distinct causes of action,(1) and seeking wholly distinct reliefs, and not to import any limitation on the power of joinder.(2) It was gradually narrowed in its application, and in Hannay v. Smurthwaite,(3) Lord Bowen observed that it was not "the intention of this rule to allow writs to be issued under which any number of plaintiffs might join any number of causes of action, or that a writ should be like an omnibus travelling on a certain route into which any number of persons may get as passengers for the journey." It was thus first restricted to cases in which relief was claimed in respect of the same subject-matter, "as Order XVI. dealing with parties, assumes an ascertained subject-matter," (4) a principle recognized here in Haramoni Dassi v. Hari Churn Chowdhry.(5) In accordance with this view, it was held in a number of cases that where the causes of action were separate and distinct they could not be joined in one action.(6)

The English rule (7) was then altered in October, 1896, the alteration restricting it to cases in which the right to relief, alleged to exist, was "in respect of or arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions," and where, if the persons joined brought separate actions, "any common question of law or fact would arise." Power also was expressly given in it to the Courts to "order separate trials, or make such other order as may be expedient," "if upon the application of any defendant it shall appear that such joinder may embarrass or delay the trial of the action."

The present English rule was therefore in widely different terms from sect. 26 of the last Code. A limited liberty of joining plaintiffs with separate causes of action is given. The nature of the limitation is plain upon the face of the rule. It was not thereby intended to allow any number of

R. 265 (1900) [libel in same words and in same document, but of different persons]. In these cases the suits were held not maintainable under O. 16, r. 1, as it stood prior to its amendment. The last case was decided after the amendment, but was under the Irish rule, which is in the same terms as the old English rule.

(7) Is in the following terms:—"All persons may be joined in one action as plaintiffs in whom any right to relief in respect of, or arising out of, the same transaction, or series of transactions, is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, where if such persons brought separate actions any common question of law or fact would arise; provided that if upon the application of any defendant it shall appear that such joinder may delay or embarrass the trial of the action, the Court or a Judge may order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient, and judgment may be given for such one or more of the plaintiffs as may be found to be entitled to relief, for such relief as he or they may be entitled to, without any amendment. But the defendant, though unsuccessful, shall be entitled to his costs occasioned by so joining any person who shall not be found entitled to relief unless the Court or a Judge in disposing of the costs shall otherwise direct."

different plaintiffs to join in one action any number of separate and different causes of action, but it was intended merely to effect a modification of the old rule by which a limited liberty of joining plaintiffs with separate causes of action should be conferred. The conditions are, firstly, that the right to relief alleged to exist in each plaintiff should be in respect of, or arise out of, the same transaction; and secondly, that there should be a common question of fact or law.(1) Where, however, there were in effect two plaintiffs and two causes of action not arising out of the same transaction, the case was held not to be within the present rule.(2)

From the foregoing it will appear that the English rule was wider than that laid down in sect. 26 of the Code of 1882, which might generally be said to have represented the views commonly entertained by the English Courts in the middle period between the first promulgation of the rule and its amendment in 1896. While it is sufficient under the English rule that the right to relief should arise out of the same transaction, the Court being given a control over the exercise of such right, the right of joinder given by that section was only in respect of the same cause of action, a right which was still further limited by certain decisions owing to the interpretation placed upon the terms "cause of action," as to which, see post. The use of the term "cause of action" in the last Code gave rise to difficulty (vide post); the phrase therefore has been omitted and r. 1 has been made to correspond with the present English rule as regards plaintiffs. It is in substantially the same terms as O. XVI. r. 1 down to the words "would arise." The portion in the English rule from "provided that" to "expedient" has been substantially embodied in r. 2 and in O. II. r. 6, post, and the portion as to judgment being given is embodied in O. I. r. 4. The second paragraph of sect. 26 of the last Code has not been re-enacted, as to which see notes to O. I. r. 4. Rule 3 dealing with defendants corresponding with sect. 28 of the last Code has been modified to bring it in conformity with r. 1. The result is an extension of the right of joinder in conformity with the English law, the decisions under which will be applicable to this rule. The Select Committee said, "It is hoped that the multiplicity of suits will be further curtailed by the new provisions we have inserted to remove limitations which we regard as needless on the comprehensiveness of a suit, and by the wider powers of amendment vested in the Courts." An adequate check (see r. 2) is provided by the power of a Court to interfere where embarrassment is likely to result.

"Persons."—This and the following rules deal only with the joinder of parties, and have no reference to the joinder of causes of action. Sect. 31 of the last Code, which provided that nothing in the section should be deemed to enable plaintiffs to join in respect of distinct causes of action, has been omitted all reference to cause of action being omitted from this section, and O. II. deal with the joinder of causes of action.

Other cases cited in the A. P. decided before the rule was altered must now be considered with reference to the alteration. The rule has been held to leave untouched the practice in Admiralty of allowing joinder of parties in collision, salvage, and wages actions: The Maréchal Suchet, 1896, P. 238.

Generally, as to parties, whether plaintiffs or defendants, every person can sue and be liable to be sued, and may thus be a party. The Code, which presupposes this rule, does not contain any provisions as to who may be parties. The portions of the Code which contain special provisions enacted on grounds of general interest, public convenience or policy, and, in the case of the incompetent, for their protection, refer generally only to the mode of suing or being sued in such cases. Every person who has a primary right or interest which has been violated in such a manner as to give him a secondary right to relief, may bring a suit as plaintiff against any person as defendant against whom an order for enforcement of that right is asked.(1)

Subject to a few exceptions, the Common Law Courts were rigidly tied down to disposing of claims arising between exactly the same parties upon each side and in the same rights. They could give a judgment for A against C or against C, D, and E, but they could not give relief of one sort against C and of another sort against D and E. Nor could they give relief of one kind to A and of another kind to B, or of one kind to A and B jointly and another to A separately. All the plaintiffs, if more than one, had to be jointly entitled, and all the defendants jointly liable, with respect to every single matter upon which the Court was asked to adjudicate. In Chancery, on the other hand, the course was to deal with the controversy or transaction forming the subject-matter of the action, as a whole, and endeavour to do complete justice to it; and for that object the Court insisted on all the parties interested in the subject-matter being brought before it.(2) The Chancery Rule has now been adopted as a general one by both English and Indian Courts. See r. 10, clause (2), post. The same person cannot, however, be both plaintiff and defendant in a suit unless he appears upon the record in different capacities.(3)

In order to enable a person to sue, the right must be a real and existing one.(1) The legal interest must be existing at the date of the institution of the suit; (5) which must be brought by the person who, at the date of the suit, represents, so far as its subject-matter is concerned, the person with whom the original transaction took place.(6) While the interest may be future, it must be a present and existing one at the time of the suit. Merely "an expectation of the possibility of a future event which, if it occurs, may give birth to an interest," is not such an interest as will give a right of suit.(1) The right must have come into existence before the date of the suit, and therefore a real owner's disclaimer, made in his deposition in a suit, has been held not sufficient to give a plaintiff a right to maintain a suit.(2) The plaintiff must have a subsisting cause of action at the time of the institution of the suit, and he cannot take advantage of events that have happened subsequently.(3) A suit by a person in respect of an act by which he may never be injuriously affected at all is premature.(4) Leaving such general considerations, it may be stated that the question as to whether there is a right to relief in any case, and as to the person in whom that right is vested, and against whom it may be claimed, and the nature of the relief, are questions of substantive law, and not part of the law of procedure, which may restrict or even extinguish such a right, but cannot create or extend it.(5) This matter therefore does not come within the scope of this Commentary, and will not be dealt with by it.(6) The rules relating to parties laid down by the Code refer not so much to the persons who may be parties as to their joinder. As to defendants, vide post.

"May be joined."—This section, under the Code of 1882, was held to be an enabling one, allowing a number of plaintiffs with the same right to relief to join in one suit instead of bringing separate suits. It did not say that all persons must be joined as plaintiffs when they had the same cause of action against the defendant.(7) The present section is equally enabling. There is a distinction between a joint right and a right enjoyed in common with others. In the first case it may be necessary for all persons jointly interested to be joined as parties, and if they are not joined the suit may be bad for misjoinder.(8) Where a person sues under a power of attorney, the principal's name should appear as plaintiff.(9) It was held that Act X. of 1859 allowed suits to be instituted by zemindars in their own names by their authorized agents, but the agent has no right to institute the suit in his own name. The zemindar's name should appear on the record as the plaintiff.(10) It has been held the managing members of a Mitakshara joint-family can sue without making the other members of the joint-family co-plaintiffs.(1) Where the plaintiff has assigned his rights during the pendency of the suit it is irregular to substitute for his name that of the purchaser; but it is an irregularity which can be cured by the consent of the defendant.(2) In a suit by or against unincorporated partnerships, the names of all the partners had to be given. This is the rule of the old Common Law, according to which a partnership is not a distinct legal entity entitled to sue or be sued in the firm name as a corporation. In India, the only departure from it recognized was in regard to corporations or incorporated companies authorized to sue or be sued in the name of some officer thereof, under sect. 435 of the last Code. The question whether and in what circumstances a benamidar is competent to maintain a suit in his own name and without the beneficial owner being a party to the suit (5) has been discussed in a number of rulings in the various High Courts, and in regard to it a considerable conflict of authority prevails. to sue, the right has been based partly on the fact that he is the transferee named in the registered instrument constituting the transfer, and on the principle that a contract can be enforced by the parties who have entered into it, partly on the ground that the defendant is estopped from raising the question, and partly on the view that the benamidar must be presumed to be suing on behalf of the beneficial owner, or, to put the same idea into other words, that the suit is really brought by the beneficial owner through, and in the name of, the benamidar. On the other hand, those rulings which are adverse (1) to the right of the benamidar to sue are mainly based on the ground that a suit cannot be maintained by any person who fails to prove, if his title is challenged, that he has a real interest of his own in the subject-matter of the suit.(2) In some cases it seems to have been held that there is a distinction between suits on bonds and the like and suits for immoveable property in that in the former case a benamidar may, and in the latter may not, sue.(3) But even in this the cases are not uniform.(4) As to benamidar defendants, see post, and as to adding a benamidar as a party, r. 10, post. to suits by a benamidar, who, as already stated, in some cases has been held not to occupy the position of a mere name lender, but a position analogous to that of a trustee holding the legal estate.

This rule itself is not obligatory. It does not enact that any persons must join as parties. It does not even say that all persons who may be interested in the result of an action must necessarily be parties,(1) or that all persons must join as plaintiffs when they have the same cause of action against the defendant.(2) Nor is it laid down anywhere else in the Code as to who must be joined as plaintiffs as distinct from those who may be so joined; and though some idea may be formed from the provisions of rule 10, yet they cannot furnish any general rule, as the first clause of the rule is restricted to the case of a bonâ fide mistake, and the discretion of the Court under the second clause is regulated by considerations different from those which must regulate the action of the plaintiffs themselves. The exact character of the right is immaterial,(3) there being no distinction between legal and equitable rights, so far as relief in a particular Court is concerned.

R. 1 was introduced to prevent a miscarriage of justice from want of parties, and to enable persons aggrieved by the same act, or having the same right to relief, to join in one suit instead of bringing separate suits.(4) The former section was not exhaustive in words, and did not say that only persons referred to in it might be joined as parties. The contrary might, no doubt, have been contended for, on the authority of the maxim, expressio unius personæ est exclusio alterius. On the other hand, it was held that there were clearly cases not falling within sects. 26 and 28 of the former Code, in which plaintiffs and defendants were and must be allowed to join in a suit. Thus persons having a successive interest were allowed to join as plaintiffs; (5) and in the case cited, in a suit by a daughter to set aside her mother's alienation of the property she held as a widow, the daughter's son was allowed to join as a co-plaintiff, though he could not acquire the property in his mother's lifetime. And in some cases, persons were allowed to join merely ex abundanti cautela. Thus a receiver of an insolvent's estate may, after the insolvent's death, sue for everything due to his estate, but for greater security his executrix may be joined as a plaintiff.(6) It is somewhat on a similar principle, that, as a general rule, unless the policy of insurance has been legally assigned, and the assignment recognized by the insurance company, or unless there has been an equitable assignment, and it can be shown that the holder of the policy has given value for it, the company is entitled to insist upon the legal representative of the assured being made a party to the suit for the amount due under the policy.(7) Where, however, there was misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, it was held that there was nothing to necessitate the dismissal of the suit, but that the party should be put to election and the plaint amended.(8)

Relief.—It was considered that the expression "the right" in the then subsisting English rule was not identical with "any right;" (1) and the expression "any relief" to be equivalent to the "same relief." (2) In Sandes v. Wildsmith,(3) Wills, J., after observing that the words "the right to any relief claimed" were "the governing words of the rule," said that the meaning of the rule was, "that where it is doubtful in whom a right sought to be enforced is vested, it is permissible to put in all possible claimants, but it does not mean that where there are two rights which are essentially different from each other, and there is no doubt as to the person in whom each of those rights is vested, it is permissible to roll two actions into one." The English and present rule use the words "any right to relief."

"In respect of, or arising out of, the same act or transaction."—The words "in respect of the same cause of action" were added in the section of the last Code, as taken from the corresponding English rule, on account of its extreme broadness, specially with reference to the decision in Booth v. Briscoe (4) in which eight persons were allowed to join in an action of libel, though no joint injury was shown. The section was held not to authorize the joinder of several plaintiffs in respect of separate causes of action.(5) Under the last Code the exact effect of this rule, as depending on the identity of the "cause of action," had in the end to depend on the sense in which that expression was understood as used in this section. It is in its broadest sense taken to denote the conditions of the maintenance of an action, which generally consists of a right and its breach. Thus every cause of action presupposes the existence of a right; but it may be observed that an actual breach is not always necessary to constitute a cause of action. In some cases even an actual denial or refusal of the right is not necessary, and a suit may be brought simply on the basis of a right. Thus any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit not only against any person denying, but also against every one interested in denying, his title to such character or right.(6) There was a considerable conflict of opinion in cases in which a breach is essential to constitute a cause of action, but the question was whether the breach alone will do that, or the right infringed also must be considered a part of it. Earlier decisions of the Bombay (7) and the Madras (8) High Courts were in favour of the construction, which included not only the act of violation complained of, but also the right violated by that act. The Calcutta High Court, on the other hand, held, in Haramoni Dassi v. Hari Churn,(1) that the expression "cause of action" must be understood as used in this section of the old Code "in its popular sense, so as to include the facts constituting the infringement of the right, but not necessarily also those constituting the right itself." According to this view, the qualification implied in the words "in respect of the same cause of action" was satisfied if the facts which constituted the infringement of the right of the several plaintiffs were the same, though the facts constituting the right upon which they based their claim to that relief in the alternative may not be the same. Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ., observed, that that construction was necessary, as, if the expression were taken in the other sense, "it is difficult to imagine a case in which two plaintiffs can claim the same relief in the alternative in respect of the same cause of action, that is in respect of the same right and the same infringement thereof;" and "from the very fact of their claiming the same relief in the alternative, the facts which constitute their right to it, as alleged by them, must be not only different but also conflicting and mutually exclusive." This decision was in accordance with a preceding one in the Bombay High Court, in which an adopted son and his mother made common cause to set aside an attachment which with the proceedings consequent thereon were held to constitute the sole cause of action in the case.(2) In an earlier case in the same Court, where managers of a temple had passed a rule restraining the right of persons to enter the temple, it was held that all could join in a suit for an injunction.(3) Both these cases were opposed to the view taken in the earliest Bombay case and were in accordance with that interpretation which was placed on the words "cause of action" by the Calcutta High Court. This interpretation was adopted in the most recent decisions of the Bombay (4) and Madras (5) High Courts. The Allahabad High Court also appeared to take the same view. Thus (6) persons having different reversionary shares in a certain estate held by a widow were held entitled to sue jointly to avoid a deed of gift of it made by her. Oldfield, J., observed that the plaintiffs, though owning different shares in the property, were alike affected by the deed of gift and acts of obstruction of the defendants to their possession, and might join in bringing the suit. And that view prevailed on appeal to the Full Bench. Probably therefore it may be stated that had this section been unamended, that view of the term "cause of action," which was adopted by the Calcutta High Court, would in future have been adopted by all the High Courts.

Even according to this view of the expression "cause of action," however, every separate act causing injury to a person constitutes a separate cause of action. Thus, where a number of prisoners were unlawfully detained in jail after the expiry of their term, the cause of action of each in a suit for damages against the Superintendent of the jail was held to be separate, as the actual acts of detention, even if simultaneous, in respect of all the persons would be generally different in the case of each person detained.(1) In the case cited, thirteen persons of the crew were on the same day convicted of desertion, and detained in the same circumstances and released at the same time; and they brought a suit for an aggregate sum, and it was held that there was nothing to justify their joining together in one suit. The headnote of the case observes that they were committed to jail under one warrant, but there is nothing in the Report itself to bear that out, and the point would be immaterial unless the act of detention were deemed to be one.(2) So where six persons jointly sought a declaration that certain proceedings of a District Temple Committee removing them from office were illegal the plaint was returned, the wrongful dismissal of each forming a distinct cause of action.(3) And a plaint was directed to be amended where there was an assault by two persons on the same occasion on two other persons.(4) In a recent case in which six persons jointly sued for libel, it was held that though the injury was caused by one act of the defendant, yet each plaintiff had a separate cause of action in respect of his own reputation.(5) It was not always easy to determine what is a separate act, and how far the unity of the act may be affected by a difference in the objects or persons affected by it. Thus where two persons living in the same house were plundered of their several properties at the same time, and sued jointly for the value of the properties plundered, the objection of misjoinder was not allowed to prevail; and Loch, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said: "The cause of action is common to both, viz. the attack on their residence; the time when the injury complained of was committed, is one and the same, and the parties who committed the injury are also the same in both cases. No Court is ousted of its jurisdiction by the form of this action, and the irregularity, if any there be, does not injure the defendants, but is in their favour, inasmuch as they have to defend one instead of two actions; and justice can be done in the form in which the suit has been brought. The cause, the time, the place, and the parties charged, being the same in both instances, the fact that plaintiffs have not a joint interest in the whole of the property plundered by the defendants is insufficient to put them out of Court." (6)

Cause of action is essentially different from subject-matter, and the cause of action mentioned in sect. 26 in the last Code could not in any case be identical with the subject-matter, the identity of which was generally held to be the test of the application of the corresponding early rule of the English Supreme Court. The rule enacted in that section was narrower or broader according as the cause of action was understood in the broad or restricted sense above mentioned.(1) Thus in the case (2) to which reference has already been made, Innes, J., observed that if some such words as "in respect to a particular subject-matter" stood in place of "in respect of the same cause of action," the suit might not have been bad for misjoinder; but that "looking to the language of sect. 26, and that of the latter part of sect 54. (of the former Code), as they jointly stand, it appears to us that the Code does not authorize the joining of plaintiffs in a suit in respect of distinct causes of action, in which they are not interested, and their interests are not merely conflicting but antagonistic." On the other hand, Tyrrell, J., in pointing out (3) the distinction between the cause of action and the subject-matter, observed that "the plaintiffs had distinct and separate subject-matters of action, to wit, their separate shares in the estate possessed for her life by the widow in alienating the property to N., to the jeopardy of the future rights of the plaintiffs as her reversionary successors to two-thirds of the estate;" and that "the plaintiffs therefore, though unconnected and separate in respect to the subject-matters of the suit, were conveniently and rightly joined in vindicating the one interest common to them all, centreing in the main issue in the case, which was simply the nature and extent of the widow's dominion over the estate she admittedly possessed."

With a view to meet these various difficulties the Legislature has now omitted all reference to cause of action, and broadened the rule of joinder in accordance with the procedure of English Courts, as to which vide ante.

"Jointly."—Thus where a person sued his brothers for his share of their deceased father's estate, but was transported for life, his sons were made co-plaintiffs, on the ground that they would be co-owners with their father in the ancestral estate; the High Court observing that "it is true they would be in law sufficiently represented by their father, but in fact they might not be represented effectually." (4)

"Severally."—In the Court of Chancery there were many cases in which co-plaintiffs might severally be entitled to the same relief and might, before the Judicature Act, have been properly joined although their claim was neither joint nor alternative.(5)

"In the alternative."—These words apply to cases in which there is a doubt as to who is the person entitled to sue upon the cause of action, as in the case of a sale to an agent, in which it may be doubtful whether the principal or agent should sue, or to cases where parties have different and conflicting interests in the same subject-matter, and an act is committed which gives the same cause of action to either party, according to the eventual determination of the Court as to which of the two is entitled to recover:

as in a case in which the plaintiffs were respectively a Receiver appointed to take possession of and manage a colliery business and other persons who were executors of the will of an equitable mortgagee of the colliery. They sued for damages for a wrongful levy of execution against the colliery, which was a trespass giving rise to a right of action in which the plaintiffs were severally or, at all events, alternatively interested.(1) In a subsequent decision, in which this passage was cited, the Court said, with reference to the view taken in the earlier case as to the meaning of the term "cause of action": "We feel, no doubt, that the cases here suggested are among those to which the words 'in the alternative' are intended to apply; but what we feel some difficulty in understanding is as to how the principal and agent in the one case, and the parties having different and conflicting interests in the other, can be said to have the same cause of action, if that expression be taken to include the facts which constitute the right and its infringement, when the facts which constitute their rights must be different."(2) A plaint was held not to be bad because it prayed for a decree in favour of all the plaintiffs in certain allegations, or in the alternative, in favour of one of them, if other allegations should be proved.(3)

Rule 2. Separate trials.—See notes to O. II. r. 6.

Rule 3. Joinder of defendants.—The third rule (4) (which [modified to meet the amendments made in r. 1] corresponds with sect. 28 of the last Code) is now substantially the same as r. 4 of O. XVI. of the Rules under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873. The former section differed from it in that the Indian Legislature had introduced the words "in respect of the same matter." The English rule has been construed to embrace cases in which the cause of action is not the same,(5) but not those in which the actions are based on entirely disconnected acts.(6) The terms of the English rule were held to be wider and more general than the terms of the former section,(7) specially as its application was subject to ss. 44, 45 of the former Code, dealing with the joinder of distinct causes of action. It was said with reference to the former Code that the Indian Legislature had in several ways shown that it did not intend to introduce here the wide latitude as to the joinder of parties allowed in English Courts.(8) It thus altogether omitted to enact any provisions corresponding to rr. 48-55 of the Order, dealing with the third party procedure, and to rr. 5 and 7 of the Order, the former of which provides that "it shall not be necessary that every defendant

(7) Muthappa Chetty v. Muthu Palani, 27 M. 80 (1903). But in Kovouri Basivi v. Tallaparagada, 35 M. 39 (1910), it was held that the test whether sect. 28 of the last Code applied was not whether the causes of action were the same, but whether the relief was sought in the same matter.

(8) See Narsingh Das v. Mangal Dubey, 5 A. at p. 170 (1882).

shall be interested as to all the reliefs prayed for, or as to every cause of action included in any proceeding against him." English r. 7 provides that "where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to redress, he may join two or more defendants, to the intent that the question as to which, if any, of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined as between all parties." These observations are no longer applicable. The limiting words "in respect of the same matter" have been omitted; the English rr. 5 and 7 have been incorporated in the present Code as rr. 5 and 7 of the present Order; and power has been given to promulgate further rules. The question of the joinder of defendants must now be dealt with on principles substantially the same as those which govern the English Courts in the same matter.

Persons.—See notes, p. 513, ante. In the under-mentioned case,(1) it was held that the rules by which the Poona Cantonment Committee was created, did by implication, though not by express words, create the committee a corporation for the purposes of the conservancy of the cantonment. It could therefore sue, and be sued, in its own name, on contracts entered into in its corporate character.

"May be joined."—It was held that the provisions (2) of sect. 28 also, like those of sect. 26 of the last Code, were neither imperative (3) and obligatory, nor exhaustive. The third rule is in the same terms as sect. 28 of the Code of 1882, except as to the omission (which is of importance) of the words "in respect of the same matter," and the introduction of words which bring it into conformity with r. 1. Additional power to make certain persons defendants is given expressly by r. 6, and there are several other cases in which persons may, and in fact must, be joined as co-defendants, though "any right to relief" is not alleged, and cannot be alleged, to exist against them. Reference may be made to the case of co-sharers and others, who ought to join as co-plaintiffs, and in their refusal to join as such, must be joined as co-defendants. There are, besides, persons against whom no right to relief exists, or is alleged to exist, and against whom no relief is or can be claimed, but who must be joined as co-defendants for an effective and final determination of the suit, or "whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit," and whom the Court may, on that account, implead under r. 10, and therefore it must be permissible for the plaintiff to implead as defendants in a suit. In the case noted,(4) the minor brother of a person who had entered into a contract was held to be rightly joined as a defendant, even though no decree for specific performance, such as was asked against the party to the contract, could be asked against him; the decision proceeding on the ground that the plaintiff was interested in having the minor before the Court, "in order to obtain an adjudication against him, as well with regard to the existence of the contract as with regard to the question whether the contract is of such a nature as to be binding on him." A leading instance of this necessity of joinder is found in the case of suits on mortgages, in which, on the grounds of equity and good conscience, it has long been considered a general rule in England, as well as in India, that all the persons having an interest in the mortgaged property must be impleaded as parties.(1) Unlike the right of joint contractees, when two or more persons make a joint promise, the promisee may, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, compel any one of such joint promisors to perform the whole of the promise.(2) And in suits on joint torts, the tortfeasors may be sued jointly or separately at the option of the plaintiff, as their responsibility has been held to be not only joint, but several also.(3) The distinction between this rule and r. 10 is this: the former refers to the action of a plaintiff at the time of presentation of the plaint in joining in the same suit as defendants, parties against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist; while the latter refers to the action of the Court at a stage subsequent to the presentation of the plaint in adding a party either as plaintiff or defendant, whose presence, in the opinion of the Court, is necessary.(4)

The Code does not contain any express provision as to who should be considered necessary parties, and what would be the effect of the omission of a plaintiff to bring on the record all necessary parties. R. 13, however, by implication shows that an objection for want of parties is a valid objection to a suit or proceeding; and this section and r. 10 by implication show who are to be deemed necessary parties. Reading this and r. 10 together, it has been held that in order that a party may be considered a necessary party defendant, two conditions must be satisfied—first, that there must be a right to some relief against him in respect of the matter involved in the suit; and second, that his presence should be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit.(5)

In a recent case in the Allahabad High Court where mortgagees, suing for recovery of the whole of the mortgage-money by sale of the mortgaged property, omitted by an oversight to implead persons who owned a share in the property distinct from the shares owned by the other defendants, it was held that only so much of the claim should be decreed as related to the latter shares.(6)

It is necessary, however, to concur in the language of Judge Story, in which he states the impossibility of laying down any rules which shall be of universal application to the joinder of parties in equity, observing that "whether the common formulary be adopted, that all persons materially interested in the suit, or in the subject of the suit, ought to be made parties, or that all persons materially interested in the object of the suit ought to be made parties, we express but a general truth in the application of the doctrine, which is useful and valuable, indeed, as a practical guide, but is still open to exceptions and qualifications and limitations, the nature and extent and application of which are not, and cannot independently of judicial decision be always clearly defined."(1)

In a suit for declaration of right against a proprietor of an estate it is necessary that the proprietor himself be made a party to the suit, not his karindah only. A decree against the latter does not bind the former. The karindah may, of course, be retained as a party if it is intended to make a personal claim against him.(2) As regards benamidar plaintiffs, see ante. A plaintiff is entitled to a decree against a benamidar defendant who has covenanted with him for the quiet enjoyment of property.(3) In a suit for rent, defendant pleaded non-liability on the ground that he was a benamidar and that the jote belonged to A. It was held that the Court was not competent to introduce A into the suit, against whom no relief had been sought by the plaintiff.(4) Darputnidar and Seputnidar are proper, though not necessary, parties.(5) In a suit for pre-emption the vendor is not a necessary party.(6)

"Any right to relief."—It is not necessary that the relief to which the right is alleged to exist should be the same.(7) Whether there is a right to relief in any case depends on the principles of the substantive law applicable, and reference is made to a few typical cases in the text-book cited.(8) In the under-mentioned case,(9) the absent decree-holders were held not to be merely parties against whom the auction-purchaser defendants were entitled to claim some indemnity, but persons against whom a right to relief existed in the plaintiff if the suit was well founded.

"In respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction."—See notes, ante, in particular note under same title, and the next paragraph but one, post.

(10) For illustrations, see notes to Annual Practice, 1914, Ord. XVI. r. 4, and Hukm Chand, C. P. C. 418, 419. In the recent case of Muthappa Chetty v. Muthu Palani, 27 M. 80 (1903), the plaintiff was held not entitled to sue jointly or in the alternative. But this case has not been followed in Aiyathurai v. Santhu Meera, 31 M. 252 (1908).

primarily to cases like those of principal debtor and surety in which both are liable, but the creditor may, at his option, enforce his right against either, though not against both. They are not restricted, however, to those cases, and find application also where the plaintiff has no option, and the liability depends on the facts as they may be found.(1) Thus, in suits on contracts entered into by an agent and repudiated by the principal, both the principal and the agent may be joined as defendants with a claim for relief against them in the alternative.(2) Where the claim was to have a mokurrari patta enforced as against the co-sharer granting it and the other co-sharers who repudiated it, and in the alternative to have the salami paid for the patta returned, it was held that the suit was in substance to enforce a contract to place the plaintiff in possession of the land under the patta and to declare his rights to it as against all the defendants, and to ask for compensation as against the defendant granting it; and that such alternative claims might be allowed against one or more of the defendants.(3) In a suit by a purchaser of land for arrears of rent against the tenant and the vendor, to whom the tenant alleged having paid the same, the two defendants were held to be properly joined, and a decree against the vendor was sustained on appeal.(4) The plaintiff in a suit to recover money from certain persons alleged to have borrowed money from his agent, is entitled, when the alleged debtors deny the loan, to make his agent a co-defendant and pray for a decree in the alternative against such agent.(5)

Omission of the words "in respect of the same matter."—It was a subject of doubt under the Code of 1882 whether the use of the two expressions "cause of action" and "same matter," in sects. 26 and 28 respectively of that Code, was intended to convey any distinction. As already pointed out, r. 1 now omits all reference to cause of action. The subject will be found further discussed in the notes to O. II. r. 3, dealing with the question whether that rule is a proviso to this. Whether the terms be synonymous or the latter more comprehensive than the former, it was held that if there were but one cause of action the joinder of defendants was justified.(6) On the other hand, where there were separate causes of action against separate sets of defendants, it was held that the trial could not proceed.(7) The difficulty arose in cases where, though there may be strictly different causes of action, the joinder was sought to be justified on the ground that there was yet "the same matter," as to which see O. II. r. 3, post. This raised the question whether, assuming that the latter term was more comprehensive than "cause of action," sect. 28 of the last Code (corresponding with rule 3 of this order) was not controlled by the section corresponding with O. II. r. 3, post; (8) and that was the basis of the decision in a case (1) in which the Punjab Chief Court held that a suit by a person to set aside the attachments, made on different dates at the instance of different defendants, of various sums to which the plaintiff was entitled, was bad for misjoinder of causes of action; as also that an order merely for the distribution of assets among several persons under sect. 295 of the former Code did not give a cause of action to a person considering himself entitled to the assets, and that a suit against those persons was not tenable, though it may be that where several decree-holders combine in getting an order of distribution passed to the prejudice of another decree-holder who is solely entitled to the money in the hands of the Court, the latter is entitled to have the question decided in a single joint suit against the former, as well as to recover the monies severally realized by them under the order, as was the case in No. 90, P. R., 1892, and in Gowri Prosad v. Ram Ratan.(2) In Gangabai v. Bal,(3) 148 persons were joined as defendants, and there was held to be no misjoinder, as the order which the plaintiff sought to have reversed or modified was common to all the defendants, and the plaintiff's claim to relief, in so far as that order was concerned, existed against all the defendants jointly. In the undermentioned suit (4) the matter was held not to be the same, the matter in the one case being an alleged breach of contract by an agent of the firm, and in the other being the right of one partner in the firm as against the other partner to have accounts taken and the partnership wound up. Where a number of persons join fraudulently in combination do some act which leads to plaintiff's ouster from the full enjoyment of his proprietary right, they may all be joined in one suit.(5) So, also, in a suit for damages for assault against several persons, they may all be joined together, if it was simultaneously "made by parties proceeding together and acting in conjunction as to time, place, and assault," as the assault is in such a case only a single act.(6) Where a suit was against two defendants uniting two causes of action, one of which was stated to have arisen out of a joint account of the defendants, and the other out of a transaction in which defendant No. 1 alone was concerned, it was held that the right to relief against the defendants quoad the second branch of the claim could not be said to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, in respect of the same matter, so as to justify the joinder in the one suit under the former section.(7) A suit (8) against one defendant was for specific performance of a contract to sell land and as against another for a declaration that he was not entitled to any charge upon that land; and Sargent, C.J., held that the relief claimed against the two defendants could not be said to be in respect of the same matter; the right to relief against one defendant being in respect of the non-fulfilment of the contract; and that against the other defendant in respect of a threatened disturbance of his possession. Where, on the other hand, both sets of creditors attached goods which the plaintiff claimed as his, and the plaintiff had to establish his ownership as against both, it was held that the right to relief against all the attaching creditors was in respect of the same matter.(1) The former section was held not to permit a tenant to bring a suit to have it determined which of two defendants, both of whom claimed rent from him, is his landlord ; (2) the High Court observing in the case cited, that "the plaintiffs had no cause of action against the second defendant beyond that he demanded rent from them and obtained a decree for that rent," and "their only cause of action against the first defendant was that he had, on some other occasion, demanded and received rent from them," and "that cannot be considered the 'same matter' within the meaning of the section." In a recent case decided under the last Code it was broadly held that the general principle governing the joinder of defendants was, that there must be a cause of action in which all the defendants are more or less interested, although the relief against them may vary, but that separate causes of action against separate defendants quite unconnected not involving any common question of law or fact could not safely be joined in one action.(3) In a recent case under the present Code it has been held that the first condition to be fulfilled before joining several persons as co-defendants is that the right to relief must arise against them all from the same act or transaction (or the same series of acts or transactions), and the second condition is that some common question of law or fact would arise against them if separate suits were brought.(4)

The Legislature, recognizing that the words under discussion have given rise to great difficulty, have followed the wording of the English rule and omitted them. Vide ante, and notes to O. II. r. 3.

4. Judgment may be given without any amendment—

Court may give judgment for or against one or more of joint parties.

(a) for such one or more of the plaintiffs as may be found to be entitled to relief, for such relief as he or they may be entitled to ;

(b) against such one or more of the defendants as may be found to be liable, according to their respective liabilities.

"Judgment may be given," etc.—Misjoinder of plaintiffs is only a plea in abatement and rather to the form than the substance of the action. It ought not therefore, if possible, to defeat the action altogether unless the defendant has been prejudiced. The provision here referred to is obviously based on the principle that the misjoinder of a party as plaintiff, to whom the relief claimed could not be awarded whilst there are others to whom it might be awarded, is a mere defect of form which is not fatal to the action.(1) Where a person and the widowed daughter-in-law of his deceased father sued for pre-emption as joint co-sharers, and the widow was found to be entitled only to maintenance and therefore not to be a co-sharer, it was held that a decree could not be given to the other plaintiff without an amendment of the plaint, and as it was too late to amend the plaint, the suit was altogether dismissed.(2)

"Respective liabilities."—The liabilities of all the defendants need not be the same, and there will be no misjoinder if some of the defendants are found not to be liable. Thus, if in a suit against six persons for possession of a certain share of land and in the alternative for its rent, the fact that only one of the defendants is found to be in possession and that a portion of the claim for rent is not sustainable against another defendant, is not a ground for dismissing the suit altogether for misjoinder of defendants.(3) An insolvent and his trustees have been sued together, though their liabilities were not the same.(4) It was held there was no misjoinder in a suit against two agents, one of whom was liable to account for twenty years and the other jointly liable with the former for the last two years of this period.(5) The suit, however, has been held to be bad where the plaintiff has united different causes of action in one suit against different defendants, who were not jointly liable in respect of each and all of such causes of action.(6) Where the defendants combined to keep the plaintiff out of his property it was held they were properly joined.(7) In the under-mentioned case the right to relief, so far as regards the first and second sets of defendants, was a right to relief against them severally, but the cause of action arose out of the single subject-matter, which formed the subject of the plaintiff's original mortgage.(8) Where there is no misjoinder of causes, a plaintiff is permitted to bring a single suit against a number of persons, even though some of them may not be interested in the entire subject-matter of the suit.(9) The general principle that the difference of the extent of the defendant's liabilities does no prevent a joinder of them in a suit is specially applicable in cases in whicl several properties comprised in an estate are alienated to different persons and all such alienees are allowed to be joined in one suit.(1) An un successful defendant may be ordered to pay the costs of the successfu one.(2)

Costs.—The second paragraph of sect. 26 of the last Code dealt with th question of costs. The words "entitled to his costs," etc., in that section referred to the joining of persons as plaintiffs, as mentioned in the first sentence of the section. The words in the corresponding English rul were held to refer to "the persons who bring the action, who act by one solicitor and who speak of themselves as the plaintiffs, though they allege that each of them has a separate right." (3) If one or some of the plaintiffs are successful, and the other or others unsuccessful, the successful were held liable to pay to the defendant the costs of the unsuccessful plaintiff,(4) and to recover from the defendant the whole of his general costs of the action; (5) Esher, M.R., observing in the case cited, that the last sentence of the section as to costs applies "as between a plaintiff who has succeeded in the action and a defendant who has failed." And it is a settled rule of Englis practice that the costs occasioned to the defendant by the joining of the unsuccessful plaintiff may be deducted from those payable by the defendant to the successful plaintiff.(6) The Select Committee in their report stated that they understood that in practice the provisions of sect. 26 of the last Code relating to costs was not operative in the Mofussil, and that part of the section has therefore not been reproduced.

Joinder of parties liable on same contract.

6. The plaintiff may, at his option, join as parties to the same suit all or any of the persons severally, or jointly and severally, liable on any one contract, including parties to bills of exchange, hundis and promissory notes.

Joinder of parties in same contract.—This rule, which corresponds with sect. 29 of the last Code, is the same as r. 6 of O. 16 of the English rules, except that the word "hundis" has been added. It is a modification of the general principle which required that wherever more than one person was liable to contribution to the plaintiff's demands, they should all be made parties to the suit.(1) The word "contract" is, however, to be construed strictly, and a liability to account under a will is not a liability under a contract.(2) In Baldeo Prasad v. Grish Chundar,(3) the endorsee of a cheque sued the endorser for a duplicate or the amount of the cheque said to have been lost, and the High Court ordered the plaint to be returned, so that the drawer might be joined as a defendant; but this was on the ground that a duplicate cheque could not be given by the endorser without the co-operation of the drawer. The rule is merely an enabling one, and does not prevent the joinder in any case in which it would otherwise be proper. Thus it has been held that the drawer and the acceptor of a bill of exchange may be joined as co-defendants in a suit brought by the holder.(4) When two out of three defendants liable for a joint debt had promised to pay separately it was held that the suit could proceed against them only.(5)

7. Where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to obtain redress, he may join two or more defendants in order that the question as to which of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined as between all parties.

"Is in doubt."—This rule, which is new, is taken from O. 16, r. 7 of the English rules with some slight verbal modifications. It has been held under that rule that while alternative relief of different kinds may be given against alternative defendants,(6) it does not enable a plaintiff to bring separate causes of action against different persons in one action.(1) The costs of a successful defendant sued in the alternative may be ordered to be paid by the unsuccessful co-defendant.(2)

One person may sue or defend on behalf of all in same interest.

8. (1) Where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons may, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued, or may defend, in such suit, on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested. But the Court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of the suit to all such persons either by personal service or, where from the number of persons or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable, by public advertisement, as the Court in each case may direct.

(2) Any person on whose behalf or for whose benefit a suit is instituted or defended under sub-rule (1) may apply to the Court to be made a party to such suit.

Scope of Indian and English rule.—It is a general rule that all persons interested ought to be made parties to a suit, howsoever numerous they may be, so that the Court may be enabled to do complete justice by deciding upon and settling the rights of all persons interested, and that the orders of the Court may be safely executed by those who are compelled to obey them, and future litigations may be prevented; also that a person who ought to be, but is not, a party to a proceeding is not ordinarily bound by any decree or order passed therein. This rule yields to the exigencies of particular cases, and there are well-established qualifications to it, such as the power of the Court under this rule to make a representative order.(3)

This rule, which corresponds with sect. 30 and a portion of sect. 32 of the last Code,(4) is the same as the English r. 9 of O. 16, except that in the present rule the word "suit" is substituted for "cause of matter," and it is here necessary to obtain permission of the Court for suing also, while under the English rule the permission is required only for defending a suit on behalf of others. The second sentence also has been added.(5) The effect of the statutory rule is merely to give Legislative sanction to the practice which long prevailed in the Equity Courts of England. The great risk from abatement, and the inconvenience and the expense involved in a great number of persons being parties, led those Courts to recognize the representative system, as it was not inconsistent with general principles that certain judicial proceedings taken by, or against, a select number as representing a large class might, if fairly and honestly conducted, bind or benefit the whole class.(1)

In the first place, the rule does not constitute but presupposes the existence of a right to sue, without which it can find no application.(2) The rule deals with procedure only, and does not affect substantive rights.(3) In the undermentioned case,(4) Shephard, J., referring to the case of Jan Ali v. Ram Nath,(5) observed that "it seems to have been considered that the granting of leave under the section would have made up for the insufficiency of interest disclosed in the plaint," but added that "with great deference, that view appears to be incorrect."

Nextly, assuming that a right of suit exists under the substantive law, the rule is merely an enabling one, allowing a suit to be instituted under certain circumstances by some of the persons interested on behalf of all.(6) Beverley, J., observed, in the case first cited, that "there are no words in the section to the effect that where persons have the same interest in a suit they are debarred from suing either jointly or severally unless they obtain the permission of the Court to sue on behalf of all the persons similarly interested;" and "the section does not forbid them from suing in their own right; it merely says that if they desire to sue on behalf of others, they must obtain the permission of the Court." Ameer Ali, J., after observing that "that section is an enabling section, and must be read in conjunction with Explanation V. to sect. 13" (corresponding with sect. 11), said: "The effect of sect. 30, therefore, to my mind is, that unless such permission is obtained by the person suing or defending the suit, his action has no binding effect upon the persons whom he chooses to represent. Where there is a joint right it may be necessary for all persons jointly interested to be joined as parties, and if they are not joined the suit may be bad for misjoinder. In order to prevent the record from being unnecessarily encumbered by many names, sect. 30 allows one or more persons having a joint interest to sue or defend with the authorization or permission of the Court on behalf of all. The section, in fact, embodies a rule of convenience based on reason and good policy, but in my opinion it was not intended to take away, nor does it take away, any right. It seems to me that sect. 30 does not give any warrant for the contention that because a person has a right in common with others he may not maintain an action for the establishment or enforcement of his own right. There is no obligation on him to sue or defend on behalf of others; and if he does not seek any relief on behalf of those who have an interest in common with him, or to bind them by his action, there is nothing in the section or in any other law to debar him from maintaining the action. Even if he were to bring a suit on behalf of himself and the others, he may choose to go on with the action on his own behalf, and would be entitled to do so, if he makes the necessary amendments. The English cases on the point are collected in Daniell's Chancery Practice,(1) and tend to show that the plaintiff, if he has a right in himself to bring an action, or the defendant if he has a right in himself to defend an action, is entitled to sue or to defend in any way he chooses without making any person a party to the action or to the defence, so long as the effect remains confined to himself." (2) As to execution, see the case cited below; (3) and as to public charity suits,(4) notes to sects. 92 and 93, ante.

"Numerous."—There is no absolute rule as to what number will be considered sufficient, though in the case mentioned (5) twenty persons were not considered sufficiently numerous. A question as to the applicability, however, of the rule has arisen where the parties are numerous. This rule, as already observed, deals with procedure only and does not confer substantive rights of suit. Under the ordinary rule of the substantive law no action is maintainable by a private individual for an infringement of the rights of the general public, unless he has suffered special damage.(6) As this rule presupposes a right to sue it gives none where there is otherwise none. This rule does not therefore allow one or more persons to sue on behalf of the general public.(7) In the case therefore of an infringement of a right of the public at large no suit will be under this section, or at all, unless on proof of special damage, in which case either one person sues in respect of his individual right, and the rule does not apply, or if he should sue on behalf of others similarly specially injured, he sues on their behalf and not on behalf of the general public.(8) In the case cited(9) it was held that a suit could not be brought on behalf of a portion (10) of the general public, such as the Hindu community, as the entire Hindu community was incapable of ascertainment, and that the words "numerous parties" (in the former section) meant parties capable of being ascertained, as "seems clear from a reference to the provisions for service of notice upon all such parties." (11) No doubt the rule is often applied where the parties though numerous can be definitely ascertained, as in the case of creditors,(1) legatees,(2) members of a samaham,(3) debenture holders, bondholders, club, and the like.(4) The rule, however, is not limited to such cases. The decision of the Madras High Court,(5) which was cited in the Calcutta case,(6) is not an authority for the principle laid down by the latter. The Hindu community,(7) no more than the Mahomedan community,(8) is not the general public but only a particular portion, though it may be a large one of the population of this country, which consists of various races and creeds.(9) Nextly, the observation of the Madras High Court that the section is "rather designed to allow one or more persons to represent a class having special interests," seems to show that the decision in the Calcutta case is incorrect, even according to the Madras decision which it approved.(10) Further, the provisions of the rule as to advertisement appear to have been overlooked, and, lastly, other decisions are not consistent with it. One or more persons have been allowed to represent classes of the general public having special interests, though they cannot sue on behalf of the whole general public. So suits have been allowed by one or more persons on behalf of others of a sect.(11) caste,(12) worshippers at a mosque,(13) parishioners of a church,(14) fellow villagers,(15) or class of villagers.(16) All these cases are suits on behalf of a defined class, though that class is composed of a more or less "indefinite number of persons." (17) Thus in one of the cases cited (18) two Brahmins were permitted to sue to enforce a trust for the benefit of Brahmins generally, of whatever kind or sect or place. In many if not in all of these cases, if the matter is looked at strictly, it cannot be said that all the parties are capable of being ascertained so that a notice might, if required, be served on each and all of them. An inquiry made for such a purpose would have no abiding result. While it was being made, and after it had been made, its subject-matter would constantly be liable to change, owing to deaths and births, new arrivals and departures of the members of the class on whose behalf the suit was sought to be instituted. The limitation of this rule, therefore, to cases where the parties can be ascertained has been dissented from in a case in which it was held that the Satchari caste of Chatra was a defined class of the general public and that the suit had been properly instituted under the former section, whether all the members of such caste were or were not capable of being so accurately ascertained as that notices could, if required, be served on each and all of them.(1)

(2) The same view was taken by Shephard, J., in Srinivasa Chariar v. Raghava Chariar, 23 M. 28, 32 (1897), where it was pointed out that there was an individual right to sue, and that if the course prescribed by this Rule was not followed in a case such as that dealt with, the only consequence was that the judgment did not bind the persons whose names were not on the record. In Kalidas v. Gor Parjaram, 15 B. 309, 319 (1890), and Tanudin v. Pandu, 18 B. 699 (1893), the corresponding section was held to be inapplicable, as the plaintiffs sued for themselves, and it was not a case of persons suing on behalf of a class.

To sum up, no suit can be brought on behalf of the general public. A suit may lie on behalf of a class of the general public having special interests, though that class may consist of a more or less indefinite number of persons; as also on behalf of numerous parties who can, in the strict sense, be accurately ascertained, as in the case of a suit by a legatee on behalf of all other legatees.

"Persons."—"Parties" was the word used originally in the corresponding rule of the English law, but it has since been altered to "persons." In Oriental Bank Corporation v. Gobind Lall Seal,(2) it was contended, without success, that the word "parties" did not mean persons in the position of creditors, but "only parties necessary to the suit, without whose presence on the record the suit would be defective;" and Norris, J., observed that the word "parties" meant persons, and "that the provisions would be unintelligible unless the word received that meaning." In accordance with this decision the word "persons" has been substituted for the word "parties" in the former Code as being the more appropriate expression. As a result of the representative system enacted in this rule, the parties represented by another, though interested, will not be parties to the suit;(3) but they can apply to be made parties; and if any person thinks that he is not properly represented by the plaintiff, as holding different views from his, he should apply to be made a party personally.(4) It has been held that it is undesirable that individual creditors should be added as parties in an administration-suit, unless they can show strong reason to think that the person who has filed the suit on their behalf is not conducting it properly.(5) Though the effect of an order under this rule is that the parties, who have obtained permission to sue as representatives, have the conduct of the suit on behalf of all those they purport to represent; yet if any person is dissatisfied with the conduct of the suit, or deems that he is not properly represented, it is open to him to make an application to secure his views being properly represented, and if necessary to take the conduct of the suit out of the hands of those who by the permission of the Court represent him.(6)

"Same interest."—The word "interest" in the corresponding English rule was formerly held to denote "beneficial proprietary interest." (2) But it has been more recently held that the rule is not confined to such cases, and that, given a common interest and a common grievance, a representative suit is in order if the relief sought is in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposed to represent.(3) In the first of the cases last cited, it was held that the plaintiffs had a common right, which was invaded by a common enemy, and that they were entitled to join in attacking the common enemy in respect of the common right, although inter se they might have different rights. The identity of interest in a suit depends directly on the identity of the relief sought, and only indirectly on the right on the basis of which the relief is sought. The rule is therefore independent of the joint, common, or several character of the right sought to be enforced, except so far as that character may determine the nature of the relief sought. Whether a right is "joint," or "common," or "several," the rule is equally applicable or not applicable according as the relief sought is, or is not, the same in any of those cases.(4) Where there is a joint right all interested must sue, or some one or more may sue on behalf of the rest. Where the right is common or several, a complete option is given. Separate suits may be prosecuted by each of the persons interested, or if numerous parties possess the same interest, some one or more may sue on behalf of the rest under the terms of this rule. The matter has been well summarised by Shephard, J., (5) who said, "The rule of the Court of Chancery, to which the section owes its origin, appears to have been made applicable in two classes of cases. There are the cases in which the number of persons claiming concurrent interest in the subject-matter, and therefore, according to strict rule, necessary (6) parties to the suit, is so large that they cannot all be conveniently joined with any chance of bringing the suit to a conclusion. And there are the cases in which numerous persons have distinct but similar rights which might be prosecuted in distinct suits. For instance, there is the case of numerous creditors of the same person, or that of many persons claiming a right of common or right of fishing in respect of the same property." (1) As already stated, the rule is an enabling one, and therefore a person whose individual several right has been infringed may sue alone. But he may also sue on behalf of himself and others, whose individual rights have been infringed, if they have the same interest with him within the meaning of the rule.(2) Co-sharers in joint property have, however, not necessarily the same interest in a suit relating to that property. In Hira Lal v. Bhairon (3) the suit was by one co-sharer against three other co-sharers to prevent them from usurping exclusive possession of the joint land, and it was held that the suit would lie, and that the corresponding section to this rule did not apply to it, as though the remaining co-sharers would in such a case have co-parcenary or joint interest with the plaintiff in the subject-matter of the suit, they would not have the same interest in the suit, and would not be so "interested" in like manner as he was; as it might be "indifferent to them whether the defendants usurped exclusive rights in the shamilat, or it may be inconvenient to them at this moment to assert their own rights." And this decision was cited with approval in Dhunput Singh v. Pareshnath Singh,(4) in which it was held that the other persons of the Sitambary sect were similarly interested in suing, though the Digambary Jains were not similarly interested. It was held by a Full Bench of the High Court in Vasudevan v. Sankaran (5) that sect. 30 (corresponding to this rule) has no application to suits to which a Karnavan is a party in a representative capacity; Shephard, J., pointing out that the interest of the Karnavan "with his right of management and possession and his obligation to maintain the junior members, is surely not identical with the interest of a junior member who has a claim for maintenance only." It has been held that a suit is maintainable under this rule where a right to a village pathway is the subject-matter of litigation, even in the absence of special damage.(6) Where a party to a suit represents others under this rule, the decree is binding on those he represents; but when such a party disobeys an injunction (which is personal in its nature) and is proceeded against in execution for that disobedience, an order in such proceedings will not be binding on those whom he was allowed to represent.(7)

(1889), Mohini Mohun Das v. Bungsi Buddan, was not meant to limit the rule to cases of joint rights strictly so-called. "Joint interests" was there used in the non-technical sense of "same interests." As to joint rights, see Nityanund Ghose v. Mohendro Kristo, 21 C. 181 n. (1889); Chuni Lall v. Ram Kishen, 15 C. 465 (1888); Lutifunnissa v. Nazirun, 11 C. 33 (1884); and see Jan Ali v. Ram Nath, 8 C. 32 (1881), where the right was treated as a joint one. [It has, however, since, been held, following Zafaryab v. Bakhtawar, 5 A. 497 (1883); Jawahra v. Akbar Husain, 7 A. 178 (1884), that the right of worship of each worshipper is an independent right wholly irrespective of the right of the other worshippers, and that neither the joinder of other worshippers nor leave under this section is necessary: Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin, 20 C. 810, 816 (1893), and see as to individual rights, Kalidas Jivram v. Gor Parjaram, 15 B. 309 (1890).]

Permission.—The Calcutta High Court has held that the requirement as to the permission is imperative, so that where it is not obtained the suit

There was in this case a private individual right, and it was therefore held that the plaintiff could sue alone and need not have recourse to this rule or ss. 92, 93, ante.

must be dismissed.(1) and that the permission must have been obtained prior to the institution of the suit, and cannot be given at the hearing nunc pro tunc.(2) A Full Bench of the Bombay High Court, however, has held that permission may, as under the old Chancery practice in England, be given at any time, as it does not involve a question of jurisdiction, and is analogous to that of adding parties, and where a suit is defective as to parties the requisite parties can be added after the suit is filed.(3) The decision has been followed by the Allahabad High Court (4) and the Madras High Court,(5) the latter also holding that where leave had been given after the commencement of the suit it was immaterial that an application to sue had been previously refused. The permission need not be in express words.(6) In the case cited, Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J., observed "that if permission can be well gathered from the proceedings of the Court in which the suit was instituted, the Appellate Court ought to hold that such permission was really granted." The Court should exercise a judicial discretion in granting the permission to some definite person or persons; (7) and permission should be given only if the number of persons suing or defending is so large as will fairly and honestly try the legal right in dispute,(8) and every right adverse to the opposite party would be represented.(9)

"On behalf."—The first part of the rule implies that the plaintiff therein contemplated wishes to sue on behalf of other persons similarly interested in suing, they also wishing the same.(10) In a recent case the Court referring to this observation, though not deciding the point, observed that as the plaintiff sued on behalf of the sect of Digambary Jains, this section primâ facie applied, but that there was nothing to indicate that the other members of the sect wished to bring the suit.(11) The present section includes also the words "or for the benefit of." "On behalf" will only be so far as the "same interest" is concerned. Thus, an order appointing a person to represent a class such as the next of kin does not affect one of the next of kin who has a distinct and independent right,(12) nor will it affect the class except as regards the property which he can legally epresent.(1) It has been held that persons conducting a suit on behalf of themelves and others with the leave of the Court under sect. 30 of the last Code now represented by this rule) have authority to enter into a compromise, so as to bind those whom they represent. In such a suit all the members of the class represented are in effect parties; and any one of them is entitled to bring himself on the record as an actual party. There is no difference between the powers of the representatives in the original litigation and in appeal.(2)

Notice.—The notice must include the names of the persons who have been permitted to represent others, so that the persons interested may have an opportunity of knowing who have been selected to represent them.(3) It is the duty of the Court to cause service of the notices or advertisements to be published under this rule. If a plaintiff omits to move the Court for that purpose, his suit should not be dismissed on account of the failure of the Court to perform this duty.(4)

Misjoinder and non-joinder.

9. No suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it.

English and Indian rules compared.—This rule reproduces sect. 19 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860, and is now substantially the same with the first sentence of O. XVI. r. 11, as it appeared after the revision of the rules in 1883. Following the English rule the rule has now been amended to include the case of non-joinder also. The rest of Order XVI. r. 11 corresponds with portions of the following rule.

Misjoinder.—Misjoinder is of several kinds: (5) (a) Of plaintiffs. This is dealt with by this rule, which deals with misjoinder of parties only. There is no misjoinder where a plaintiff is entitled to recover all the estate sued for, and the name of another person is added merely as a matter of caution.(6) (b) Of defendants. This is also covered by the present rule. (c) Of causes of action, or subjects of suit. This class of misjoinder is dealt with by O. II. rr. 3–7, post. (d) Of plaintiffs and causes of action. This was impliedly forbidden by the second paragraph of this section in the last Code, read with sect. 26 of that Code.(7) But see now, post, "Distinct causes of action." (e) Of defendants and causes of action, or multifariousness strictly so called; that is, when one of the defendants is not interested in the whole of the relief sought. See notes to O. II., post.

Where a plaintiff alleging himself to be entitled on the death of a Hindu widow to the possession of certain immoveable property, upon the death of such widow brought a joint suit against three sets of defendants, being persons to whom the widow in her lifetime had by separate alienations transferred separate portions of the property claimed. Held, that such suit was bad for misjoinder of both parties and causes of action, and that sect. 578 of the former Code could not be applied to cure the defect: but the plaintiff was allowed on terms to withdraw his suit as against two out of three sets of defendants with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action.(1) But see now sect. 99, which is amended to include misjoinder.

Nonjoinder.—Even before the revision of the rules in 1883, the Court, notwithstanding the absence of these words, treated the English rule as comprehending cases of "non-joinder" as well as "misjoinder."(2) It was said that it could not be legitimately inferred from the provision as to misjoinder that the suit "shall be defeated by reason of non-joinder of plaintiffs who ought to sue;" (3) and that a similar construction to that put upon the English rule should be followed here, the power given by the last clause of the first paragraph of this section in the old Code being held to amount to a direction to the Court not to dismiss a suit on the ground either of misjoinder or of non-joinder.(4) The amendment of the section now makes this point clear. The English rule, which corresponds with this and the next rule, was intended to do away with pleas in abatement and demurrers for want of parties.(5) The present remedy is to apply for the joinder of the party. The rule as to parties is for the purposes of justice, and the Court has ample powers under rule 10 to add parties whenever they ought to have been joined, or whenever without them the Court cannot deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it.(6) So far as the initial stage of the suit is concerned, there can be no question. If an objection is taken by the defendant to the non-joinder of a necessary party, the Court will not dismiss the suit if an application be made to it by the plaintiff to add that party, but will add the party and proceed with the suit.(7) There is, however, this distinction between the two cases, that misjoinder of plaintiffs can never subsequently be fatal to a suit; though non-joinder of a plaintiff in certain cases may.(1) An objection may be taken to misjoinder and no notice may be taken of it. If there has in fact been a misjoinder, the suit will be dismissed as regards the party misjoined and the Court will deal with the rights of the other parties.(2) Where, however, it is the right of the defendant if he takes the objection in proper time to insist upon all of certain persons being joined as plaintiffs; and if after the objection has been raised the plaintiff proceeds with the suit without taking steps to add the person or persons whose non-joinder has been objected to and the Court finds that the objection is well founded, the suit must be dismissed.(3) A suit may be dismissed for non-joinder of persons against whom the plaintiff is entitled to relief in respect of the matter involved in the suit and whose presence is necessary in order to enable the Court to adjudicate upon all the questions involved in the suit.(4) Apart from cases where joinder of parties is required under the Common Law, the effect of non-joinder must also be considered with reference to any special statutory requirements which may exist on the subject. Thus, sect. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act required that all persons having an interest in the mortgaged property should be joined, provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest. This section is now incorporated as r. 1 of O. XXXIV. As to the effect of non-joinder of persons interested in mortgaged property, see the cases undermentioned.(5)

The principle of this section should be applied, so far as may be, by Appellate Courts also.(6) In the case cited, the suit was for possession of a small corner of gorah land, which had been awarded to the plaintiff on a partition of the whole culturable land of the village. Only eleven of the proprietors were made defendants by the plaintiff, but the Original Court impleaded the entire proprietary body as co-defendants. On appeal, the plaintiff again impleaded only eleven, contending that he could obtain full relief from them. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal for the non-joinder of the other proprietors. The Chief Court held the dismissal to be wrong, and observed that the lower Appellate Court should either have decided "the appeal as between the parties before it, leaving with the plaintiff the risk of not having the other defendants before the Court," or, under O. XLI. r. 20 made them respondents. In a recent appeal under sect. 15 of the Letters Patent, where, in a suit instituted under the last Code, a co-sharer had omitted to join parties who were apparently his co-sharers, it was held by the Calcutta High Court that the suit was bad for misjoinder, since it was not under this rule but under sect. 31 of the last Code, which did not contain a saving clause in favour of non-joinder.(1)

"Defeated."—If there is such a misjoinder as to cause inconvenience and expense to the defendant, the suit should not be tried, but the proper course will not be to dismiss the suit, but to reject the plaint.(2) Where there is no misjoinder of parties, but misjoinder of causes of action against the same defendant, the causes not triable conveniently should be tried separately or excluded under O. II. r. 6.(3) Where, however, there was misjoinder both of parties and causes of action, it was held that the suit should be dismissed.(4)

Distinct causes of action.—The second paragraph of this section under the last Code ran: "Nothing in this section shall be deemed to enable plaintiffs to join in respect of distinct causes of action." It was not to be read as if it ran, "Nothing shall be deemed to enable a plaintiff to join distinct causes of action." This was clear from the provisions of sect. 45 of that Code, and O. II. r. 3 of this, which distinctly enable a plaintiff to join in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant or the same set of defendants.(5) In this case, a plaintiff came into Court claiming a portion of the inheritance of a deceased Mahomedan on the allegation that he had by two separate sale-deeds of different dates purchased the property from two of the heirs of the deceased, and that the said property was withheld from him by another of the heirs of the deceased, who was in possession of some of it; and by certain transferees of other portions from the said heir. Both the remaining heir and the transferees from him were made defendants. Held that there was no misjoinder of parties or of causes of action in such a suit.(6)

The second paragraph was held not to apply where plaintiffs joined in respect of the same cause of action, as, for instance, where a widow and the son adopted by her to her deceased husband sued to have the deceased's property declared theirs, the widow admitting the adoption, and there being no antagonism between the claims of the two.(1) A Mahomedan widow and her daughter instituted a suit against her husband's heirs for their shares in the husband's property, the widow alleging that a certain conveyance and a release which she was induced to execute under a false representation were invalid; and the daughter relying on this and on the further allegation that the widow had no power in any case to execute the release so far as the daughter's share was concerned. For defendants it was contended that the suit was bad for misjoinder and multifariousness, but it was held that neither of these contentions was good. The plaintiffs sought their share of the family property and claimed that their shares had been improperly dealt with. It was true that the defendants set up different claims to the property, but they were all based on the validity or otherwise of the release.(2)

This paragraph no longer appears in the present rule, doubtless because of the amendments made in O. I. r. 1. Probably the position now is that where two or more plaintiffs base their claims to relief on a common ground within the meaning of that rule, claims may be united in the same suit.

Suit in name of wrong plaintiff.

10. (1) Where a suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff or where it is doubtful whether it has been instituted in the name of the right plaintiff, the Court may at any stage of the suit, if satisfied that the suit has been instituted through a bonâ fide mistake, and that it is necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute so to do, order any other person to be substituted or added as plaintiff upon such terms as the Court thinks just.

Court may strike out or add parties.

(2) The Court may at any stage of the proceedings either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just, order that the name of any party improperly joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, be struck out, and that the name of any person who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, be added.

(3) No person shall be added as a plaintiff suing without a next friend or as the next friend of a plaintiff under any disability without his consent.

Where defendant added, plaint to be amended.

(4) Where a defendant is added, the plaint shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, be amended in such manner as may be necessary, and amended copies of the summons and of the plaint shall

Sub-Rule (1). English rule and Indian rule compared. This rule is an amalgamation of sects. 27, 32 and 33 of the last Code, and the first sub-rule corresponds with sect. 27 of the old Code.(1) The latter, as originally enacted, was the same as r. 2 of O. XVI. of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, with the exception that the terms in which the substitution or the addition of the plaintiff could be ordered were not required to be "just," but such as "the Court might think just." Act XII. of 1888 inserted further in this section the words "at any stage of the suit," and "with his or their consent;" the former evidently to avoid the construction placed on the section by Pontifex, J.,(2) and the latter with reference to the construction placed on the English r. 2, in which a person was not allowed to be joined as a plaintiff without his consent.(3) This is now provided for by the third sub-rule. Sir Arthur Wilson, in explaining the effect of the first sub-rule, says: (4) "It has often happened that actions have been inadvertently brought by the wrong person—as by cestui que trust, instead of trustee; by mortgagor, instead of mortgagee. Often the same mistake has been made where it was a matter of real difficulty to say which of two persons ought to sue—as in the case of contracts made by agents, as to which it is often a question of much nicety to determine who ought to sue. Though the Common Law Courts had the largest powers of adding parties, or amending misdescriptions of parties, they had no power to substitute one plaintiff for another, such as this rule confers." (5) The same difficulty was experienced in British India, as the Courts had no power here also to substitute any person's name for the plaintiff's.(6) The rule, however, does not give a Court unlimited power to remodel the proceedings.(7) It has been held that the power given under this rule is not excluded in cases where the person originally suing has no right to institute the suit.(8)

"Suit."—In the undermentioned case,(9) Banerjee, J., held that this word did not include an appeal, sect. 582 of the former Code (corresponding with sect. 107 of this) not making all the provisions applicable to suits applicable also to appeals. Maclean, C.J., expressed a grave doubt whether this word and "plaintiff" could be read as including an "appeal" and "appellant." These doubts were, however, based on the wording of sect. 582. The drafting has now been altered, the first portion of sect. 582 standing by itself as sect. 107, and the latter portion being represented by O. XXII. r. 13. In an early case,(1) the High Court, in a special appeal, allowed the name of the real persons to be substituted for that of the receiver, who had by mistake brought the suit on their behalf in his name. And in Seshamma v. Chennappa,(2) the original Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the will relied upon was not genuine, and the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the suit was wrongly brought in the name of the plaintiffs as executors. The High Court, on second appeal, allowed an amendment by substituting the minor son as plaintiff with one of the original plaintiffs as next friend. In the converse case where a plaintiff sued in his personal, instead of his representative, capacity an order under this rule was made.(3)

The principle of the section has been, moreover, held to be of general application, and to apply analogically to a miscellaneous application also.(4) In the case cited, an application to raise the attachment of a property was made by the Official Assignee of Bombay as an attorney of the Official Assignee of Madras, and he was, instead of the latter, wrongly described as the applicant; and Strachey, J., held that as the affidavit annexed to the application showed the real fact, the application was not to be dismissed, but amended by the substitution of the correct name, and that the analogy of a plaint would, under this rule, support the amendment.

"Doubtful."—So where it was doubtful whether a road contractor or the vestry ought to sue a tramway company which had injured the road, the vestry was therefore added as a co-plaintiff in a suit by the road contractor.(5) In the under-mentioned case the suit was filed by a benamidar. Parsons, J., said that he would hesitate before deciding that the suit was wrongly filed, but any defect there may have been was cured by the lower Court acting under this section.(6)

"The right plaintiff." The question as to who is the right plaintiff will depend on the circumstances of the case in which the question should arise, and on the substantive law applicable. From a general point of view, it has been explained already who may be a plaintiff. Every person will be a right plaintiff in a suit if he could join as a plaintiff in that suit.(7) If, however, there has been a bonâ fide mistake the Court will rectify it. So where a suit was brought by one, X, as the authorized manager of Y, an amendment was made by striking out X and instituting Y, his employers, as plaintiffs in the case.(8) A case of misdescription must be distinguished from that of non-joinder.(1) The rule has been said to be applicable where it is found that a plaintiff cannot get the full relief which he seeks without joining some other persons as co-plaintiff.(2) It may, however, be a question whether in some cases, at any rate, such a joinder should not be made under sub-clause (2). Under this sub-rule there may be substitution, with which the second sub-rule does not deal,(3) or addition. In the case of the first sub-rule, the original plaintiff may be either a wrong plaintiff or a doubtful plaintiff. The second sub-rule deals with the case of a person who is a right plaintiff in the sense that he is a person who should sue though he may be a person who is unable to obtain relief unless others are joined as co-plaintiffs with him. The matter, however, is not one of practical importance unless it be correct, as has been held,(4) that a change of parties as plaintiffs under this sub-rule does not give rise to such a question of limitation as arises under the second sub-rule.

"May."—The Court is not bound to add any person. In a case (5) apparently under the section corresponding to the second sub-rule, the Court over-ruled the defendant's objection as to the non-joinder of certain co-sharers of the plaintiff, but the lower Appellate Court decided it against the plaintiff. It was contended, on second appeal before the High Court, that that Court was bound to do justice by adding them as parties. The High Court observed, however, that "if the plaintiff has insisted upon his right to bring an action in the absence of his co-sharers, he must abide by the result; and that it is too late, at this stage of the case, for him to ask to be allowed an indulgence of which he did not avail himself when it was available."

"Mistake."—The mistake may be either of law or fact.(6) Fry, J.,(7) considered that the corresponding rule of the English law did not apply where the plaintiff did not admit his mistake and insisted on his rights, but that while the Court could not substitute one plaintiff for another, except by the first plaintiff's consent, and where he admits that he has commenced his action improperly, yet in a proper case the Court will add a plaintiff under the second sub-rule. Where a son sued for his share in the family inheritance to which his father, then alive, was entitled, alleging that the father was insane, it was held that in the absence of anything to show that the father authorized the suit, the Court could not regard its being brought in his son's name and not in his own as a bonâ fide mistake, such as could be corrected under

The dictum in this case does not appear to be correct, for if the substituted or added plaintiff is a new plaintiff, then s. 22 of the Limitation Act will equally apply in the case of the first as of the second sub-rule. This dictum has been recently doubted in Bhola Roy v. Jung Bahadur, 19 C. L. J. 5 (1913).

this rule.(1) An action, through a bonâ fide mistake, was commenced in th name of the wrong person as plaintiff, and the case on a point of law was decide against him. The original plaintiff then moved to substitute another as plaintif which was done.(2) There can be no bonâ fide mistake when the person askin to be substituted or added acquired his right to be a plaintiff since the institutio of the suit, and had no locus standi at the time of the institution.(3) Th mistake must be as to the plaintiff, because a mistake as to the defendant can b rectified only under the second sub-rule.(4)

"Necessary for the determination."—Under this rule it is essentia that the order for substitution or addition should be necessary for the deter mination of the real matter in dispute.(5) It contemplates, it has been said only cases in which the necessity is of the joinder of a person as a plaintiff, an there can be no determination of the matter in dispute until such joinder—a case which chiefly arises in suits for the enforcement of or relating to join rights by persons jointly entrusted as co-contractors, joint-owners and co-sharer of property, or as members of joint families, or partners in business.(6) Th question who should be joined is part of the substantive law applicable to th case, and is not therefore here considered.(7)

"Substituted or added."—There is no difference in principle whethe a plaintiff is added or substituted.(8) In the following cases, plaintiffs hav been substituted,(9) or added,(10) under this rule or the section corresponding t

the second sub-rule. It is no objection to the substitution or addition of another person that the suit will fail even if he is substituted or added as the object of the provisions of the section is not that a party's case should be so framed as to succeed, but that it should be so framed that it can be adjudicated upon by the Court, whether in his favour or against him.(1) The institution of a suit by a wrong party cannot operate to keep alive the rights of one who by his delay has brought himself within the provisions of the Limitation Act.(2) It has therefore often been held that if the period of limitation has lapsed as regards the person added, the suit must be dismissed.(3) Although this rule only applies where the action has been commenced through a bonâ fide mistake as to the plaintiff, yet as the former section and sect. 32 of the former Code were both used together, the Court had full power under the combined rules to deal with all questions relating to the adding, striking out, or substitution of parties.(4)

Consent.—Reference to this has been struck out as it has been dealt with in the third sub-rule. No person is obliged to have his or her name added as plaintiff in a suit without his or her consent. And the justice of the rule is obvious, because the suit may be improperly brought; and if a party were made plaintiff without his consent, he might also be made liable to costs. If other parties should be joined as plaintiff, and they refuse to be joined, the proper course is to make them defendants, so that they are all before the Court, and the latter may make what order it considers just as to costs.(5)

"Upon such terms."—Amendment is an indulgence, and the applicant will generally have to bear costs. The terms usually imposed are that, if the original plaintiff is found not to be entitled to maintain the action, he must pay the costs up to the time of the joinder or substitution, and that the plaintiff joined or substituted will be entitled only to such relief as he could have claimed if the action had commenced at the time of his joinder as plaintiff.(6)

Origin and scope of sub-rule 2.—This clause, which as well as clauses 3 and 5 corresponds with sect. 32 of the last Code, is taken from r. 11, O. 16, of the English rules. The distinction between this clause and O. I. r. 1, is that the latter refers to the action of the plaintiff at the time of the presentation of the plaint in joining defendants, whilst this rule refers to the action of the Court at a stage subsequent to the presentation of the plaint in adding a party either as plaintiff or defendant.(1) It deals with joinder and not with substitution.(2) It does not apparently apply to divorce proceedings; (3) but the provisions of sect. 53 of Act I. of 1894 (Land Acquisition) are sufficiently large to allow the adaptation of this section to matters before the Judge referred to him by the Collector.(4) As to Revenue Courts,(5) see note. It was held under the Code of 1859 that the section should receive a very liberal construction; (6) and under the Code of 1882 that the section was wide enough to meet every case of defect of parties.(7) The section is not exhaustive, and it was held in the case cited below,(8) that even if it did not apply, the Court had, in the circumstances of that case, which dealt with a public trust, an inherent power to add new parties. The effect of the amendment of the section is to bring it into greater conformity with the English rule (vide post). The last clause but two of sect. 32 of the last Code is now incorporated in O. I. r. 8. Where in a suit for the recovery of possession of property, the plaintiff falsely denied the title of persons whom he had joined as defendants and asserted that an exchange by which he had transferred this property to the defendants had never been acted upon, but it was found that the exchange had in fact terminated his title and had been acted upon, and he could not sue the principal defendant, it was held that he had not made a bonâ fide mistake within the meaning of this rule.(9)

Court.—Upon the question whether the powers given by this rule are exercisable only by the Court of first instance, or both by it and a Court of Appeal, a distinction must be drawn between the case (A) where a person has been a party to the original suit, but is not a party to the appeal, and this may be (a) where the party to the original suit has died, or (b) has not been added a party to the appeal; and (B) where the person sought to be added has not been a party to the original suit.

Case (A) (a) is provided for by sect. 107. When the person alleged by the appellant to be the legal representative of a deceased respondent had been put on the record under these provisions, the Madras High Court held that the Court might add under this section another person who claims on good primâ facie grounds to be the representative of the deceased.(10)

Case (A) (b) is provided for by O. XLI. r. 20, so far as the addition of a person as respondent is concerned. The Court may in second appeal act under this rule, although the person added was not a party to the first appeal.(1) Under the Code of 1859 the Court exercised this jurisdiction under the section corresponding to the present one.(2) The Bombay High Court has held that the Court cannot make any person a co-appellant who was a party to the original suit but who did not appeal.(3)

As regards case (B), it is sufficiently established that the powers conferred by this section may be exercised under sect. 107 by a Court of Appeal, and that by the operation of that section the present rule is applicable to the Appellate Court. So an Appellate Court may strike out the name of any party improperly joined.(4) It may also add a party and remand the suit for trial,(5) or without remand proceed with the appeal if the party added so desires.(6)

It is true that the Court in Mihin Lal v. Imtiaz Ali,(7) observed that "a person who has been a stranger to the suit in the Court of first instance ought not to be brought in to the record of an appeal, unless he is brought in as a representative under the sections applying to the bringing in to the record of a representative in case of the death of a party to the suit, or the devolution of title. When an Appellate Court thinks it is necessary to have as a party before it in appeal a person not appearing in a representative capacity and who is not a party to the suit in the Court of first instance, the Appellate Court should, in our opinion, remand the case to the Court of first instance, direct that Court to bring in the particular person as a defendant, or as a plaintiff if he consented, give him time to file his statement and opportunity to produce his evidence, and try the issues raised between him and the opposite side." is submitted, be read in connection with the circumstances of that case nder which a remand might have been necessary. In a subsequent ecision,(1) the same High Court assumed that the Appellate Court might self add a new party, though upon such addition it would ordinarily ad in the absence of consent of the party so added be necessary to mand the case so that it might be re-tried in his presence. In Madhub hunder v. Buktesuree,(2) the lower Appellate Court had dismissed a uit brought by a person on behalf of a minor without obtaining a certificate f guardianship, and the High Court on special appeal allowed the minor who ad just come of age to be made a plaintiff. In this case the party as already on the record, and the suit which was originally instituted on his chalf was allowed to proceed directly at his instance. Where the receiver f an estate, under the permission of the Court and on behalf of the parties nterested in the estate, brought a suit by mistake in his own name, it was eld on appeal that the receiver having full power to institute the suit, and no bjection having been taken in the first Court, the error could be rectified without ne consent of the persons interested or further notice of appeal.(3) A lower ourt cannot add parties after the suit has been carried out of it into the Court f Appeal.(4)

"May."—The section is thus permissive and not imperative,(5) the matter esting in the Court's discretion. As to the meaning of this word, see notes to reamble, ante. But notwithstanding that the Court has a discretion to act, the case is one in which it should act, it ought to act.

Speaking of the expression in the corresponding rule of the English law, essel, M.R., in Wilson v. Church,(6) said: "It is absurd to say that the Court may' do so, if it did not mean that it was the duty of the Judge to add the arty if the proceedings were in such a state that the party could properly be dded. The Legislature were obliged to say 'may,' because it might be at ny stage of the proceedings." And it is held there, as a general rule, that the Court thinks that the effect of non-joinder in a suit can be removed by aking a person a defendant, the Court should order him to be so made, and ot allow the suit to be defeated on account of non-joinder.(7) And the same ule applies in this country.(8) And in Jonab Ali v. Golam Assad,(9) Jackson, J., bserved: "As to the defect of parties, it seems almost incredible that the udge should, when a suit is ready for hearing, and when he himself has failed o take action under that section (corresponding to sect. 32 of the Code of 1882), ismiss a suit upon the technical ground that some persons having interest n the subject-matter of the suit have not been made parties. If it were at all ecessary, it was the duty of the Court to take action under that section, and ring the proper parties on the record."

The power conferred by this rule, which should be liberally construed, is necessarily very wide. It should, however, be exercised in a reasonable manner.(1) and the Courts ought to take care in its exercise. Thus, Markby, J., in the case cited.(2) said: "To bring persons on to the record, whose interests are not identical with either plaintiff or defendant, necessarily complicates the proceedings, and greatly impedes the progress of the suit. This disadvantage very frequently outweighs the advantages arising from finality of litigation, which is, upon the whole, the best justification for bringing in fresh parties. This alone ought to make the Courts of first instance very careful in the exercise of the power granted by sect. 73 (now the present rule)." If embarrassment or inconvenience will be caused, the order will probably not be made.(3)

It is not profitable, however, in a matter of discretion to attempt to formulate particular rules for its exercise. Addition has been refused, where it would have led to a great variation in the plaint.(4) Generally, but not always, the Court will in the exercise of its discretion refuse to give leave to add a plaintiff when the result would be to introduce a new cause of action, and subject to the rule enacted by clause 1, where the original plaintiff has no right of action, he cannot by amendment under this rule introduce a plaintiff in whom there is a right of action and so make an entirely new case.(5) And generally, care should be taken that the nature of the suit is not changed.(6) But it was held in the under-mentioned case that at an early stage a person may be added as a party, even though the addition may lead to an alteration in the nature of the proceedings. Thus in an action in personam against the owners of a vessel for damages caused by its collision, the ship has been added as a defendant. The vessel had not been impleaded originally, as at the time of the institution of the suit it was submerged in the harbour. It was contended that it was not competent to engraft proceedings in personam upon proceedings in rem; but Farran, J., said: "The later decisions afford no ground for the contention that at an early stage and in a proper case the initial proceedings cannot be amended so as to bring them into the form which they would have assumed in the first instance, but for the ship not being, or not being supposed to be, amenable to the process of the Court." The exercise of discretion must, of course, be of a judicial character, but will, as in other cases, not be interfered with on appeal, unless it is manifestly unjudicial and wrong.(1) It is independent of the restrictions imposed by law on the parties. So the Court may make the Government a party, even though the notice required by the Code has not been given, the absence of the notice not affecting the power of the Court in any case.(2) An application to strike out or change the parties on the record should not be made ex parte.(3) And before a person is added as a party, unless he is in Court and cognizant of the proceedings, a notice may be issued asking him to show cause why he should not be so added, and the notice should show the grounds on which either of the parties applies to have him added.(4) The defendant on record cannot object to the addition of any person as a defendant, even in a suit which has been instituted with special leave required on account of the accrual of only a part of the cause of action within the jurisdiction of the Court.(5)

"At any stage," etc.—The rule has been here simplified. The former section drew a distinction (6) between orders striking out and orders adding. The former could be made only on or before the first hearing, the latter at any time before the suit had actually terminated (7) (vide post). And, further, while orders of the first kind could only be made upon the application of the party, the latter orders might have been made at any time. Both the English rule and the present section contain the words "at any stage of the proceedings." Under the last Code the words were "at any time," and under the Code of 1859 "at any hearing." Under the English rule it has been held that there is jurisdiction to allow amendment, even after final judgment, as long as anything remains to be done in the action, though it be only assessment of damages, though whether or not the Court will exercise the jurisdiction will depend on the circumstances of each case.(8) Under the Code of 1859 also, in Vakat Chand v. Advocate-General,(9) parties were allowed to be added after a decree had been made whereby the suit was referred to the Commissioner's Office to have accounts taken and property sold. But when the plaintiff, after his case had been gone into and some of his witnesses examined, applied to have certain persons made co-defendants, the Court was held to have exercised its discretion properly in refusing to add them at that stage, even though "they were the parties from whom, if he got a decree, he would have to receive possession."(10) Under the Code of 1882, "though sect. 34 limits the time during which the defendant may object as of right for want of parties, there is nothing in the Code to prevent his applying at any time to the Court to exercise its powers of adding persons who ought to have been joined, or to prevent the Court from exercising its power upon such an application." (1) An order allowing a co-widow, who was not a party to the suit, to be joined in execution proceedings as a joint decree-holder was not set aside, as the Court (2) was not prepared to say that the Subordinate Judge had not a discretionary power at any stage of the suit. They observed, however, that the power was restricted to the cases in which joinder might be necessary for the adjudication of questions raised in the suit, and that in that case that period had passed; and that "it is unusual and inconvenient to allow a person, who might have applied before decree, to be joined as co-plaintiff after decree, even if it be lawful to do so, where no interest has devolved and no interest has been created since the institution of proceedings." In Tikam Singh v. Thakur Kishore (3) the suit was for a sale of the property under the Transfer of Property Act, and defendant's minor brother and sons, who were members of a joint Hindu family, and interested in the property within the meaning of sect. 85 of the Act, were added as co-defendants, on an application by the plaintiff, presented even after a decree had been made against him, and set aside under sect. 108 of the former Code, corresponding with O. IX. r. 13 of this. If, however, it becomes necessary to enforce a judgment against persons who have acquired a title after it was made, this cannot be done by execution but an action must be brought for that purpose. (4)

"Upon or without the application."—This is an application, if made, of either party, plaintiff or defendant. Though either party may apply, the result of such application may vary according as it is made by either the plaintiff or the defendant. Thus, a person may sometimes be made a co-defendant on plaintiff's application but not on the defendant's.(5) And, as a general rule, a person whose right to join as a plaintiff is denied by the plaintiff on the record should not be made a co-plaintiff, though he may be made a defendant.(6) The plaintiff is not bound to make the application, even in cases in which the Court will usually allow the addition of a person as a party. So while the Court will usually sanction the addition of assignees pendente lite, the plaintiff is not bound to implead them.(7) A person may, however, be made a party without the application of either party and on his own application, (8) the Court acting itself on the information of a third party. The right to make the application contemplated arises with the necessity for making it.(1) A person may, however, be added as a defendant to an interpleader suit, even if the plaintiff does not recognize any right in the party who seeks to be added to share in the thing in respect of which the interpleader suit is brought.(2)

In representative suits falling within O. I. r. 8 of the Code, a person who is not a party on record is often made such on an application by himself; and, in fact, as O. I. r. 8 states, the course to be taken by any one of the class on behalf or against which a suit is brought, who desires to intervene, is by applying to be made a defendant in person.(3) There is a considerable difference between the position of a person who is made a defendant on his own application, and who is so made without any application of his. The former has to make out a primâ facie case before the plaintiff can be asked to meet it; (4) but against the latter, the plaintiff has to prove his case, as against the original defendant,(5) whose position as regards the burden of proof is not altered by a person being made a co-defendant on his own application.(6) It was held that when the name of a person who had been made a party was struck out, all the evidence produced by him ought to be excluded.(7) The order giving leave to strike out a defendant should provide for his costs.(8) If when a name is struck out the Court has not jurisdiction to try the case, the plaint should be returned to be presented in the proper Court.(9) In a suit (10) for possession of land between persons, each of whom claimed to be the lessee of it, and the lessors from whom they alleged having derived their right respectively had been made parties, it was held that that had been done unnecessarily, as there was no cause of action against either of them, and the Court ordered their names to be struck out. And where two persons in the same suit claim pre-emption in regard to the sale, but without having any joint right, the name of one of them ought to be struck out.(11)

As to the exercise of powers under this section on appeal, vide ante, p. 551, "Court."

The terms will be such as the Court thinks just under the particular circumstances of the case. So the Court has imposed the term that the person added as a defendant should consent to be bound by all the previous proceedings in the suit in the Court, and by any order that the Court might make as to the costs of those proceedings; (1) as without such consent the evidence already existing on the record could not be used against him.(2) So also a party has been added who consented to be bound by the preliminary judgment which had already been passed, the Court directing that further proceedings were to be carried on against him in the same manner as if he had been an original defendant.(3) An order has been made for adding a Bank as defendant on its undertaking, if the Court should so direct, to pay its own costs and those of the other party to the action, to enter appearance at once, to appear on motion for judgment next day, and to waive questions of form.(4) And the Court has offered on the defendant's application to add a person as a co-defendant against the wish of the plaintiff, if the defendant would indemnify plaintiff against his costs.(5) A Court cannot of its own motion add a Receiver as a defendant, when the leave of the Court appointing the Receiver has not been obtained.(6)

Striking out.—Further, no name could be struck out by the Court suo motu without an application from a party, nor at the trial, but only on or before the first hearing. Thus, where a suit was dismissed against one of the defendants some time after the issues were settled, the order was set aside as illegal.(7) And the name of a person who had been added as a defendant after the first hearing could not be struck out in any case, even if a notice could not be served on him on account of the non-discovery of his whereabouts.(8) If persons improperly joined do not move to be struck out and take a part in the defence, they may be held liable jointly with the other defendant for costs of the action.(9) And where a defendant having put in a statement of defence applied to have his name struck out he was refused his costs, as he had not applied at the first possible moment.(10)

This distinction between orders striking out and orders adding parties has been abolished and either class of order may now be made before, on, or after the first hearing at any time, and either upon the application of the party or of the Court's own motion. It will be observed that the words in the second paragraph of the former section "order that any plaintiff be made a defendant or that any defendant be made a plaintiff" do not now appear; but the same power to order this remains, as in such a case a Court would strike the party off the side of the suit in which he had been placed and re-add him on the opposite side. Such a transposition is made frequently in, though not confined to, partnership suits.(1) Thus, in Edulji Muncherji v. Vulleebhoy,(2) the plaintiff wished to withdraw, and ten of the defendants supported his application; and on the application of two of the other defendants, the Court allowed them to be made plaintiffs, and the plaintiff to be made a defendant. A defendant who has assigned all his rights in the subject-matter of the suit, and has no longer any interest in it, has no right to be made a co-plaintiff.(3)

"Ought to have been joined;" "or whose presence may be necessary."—No provisions have been laid down in the Code as to the persons who ought to be joined, or whose presence may be necessary before the Court, and the question must be determined on general principles with reference to the object contemplated by the rule, which is "to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit." Other sections may, however, be considered to furnish a guide to the Court in the exercise of its discretion under this rule.(4)

In the words of Lord Redesdale, "All persons materially interested in the subject ought generally to be parties to the suit, plaintiffs or defendants, however numerous they may be, so that the Court may be enabled to do complete justice by deciding upon and settling the rights of all persons interested, and that the orders of the Court may be safely executed by those who are compelled to obey them, and future litigation may be prevented." (5) Lord Hardwicke observed that "the general rule is that you must have all parties before the Court who will be necessary to make the determination complete and to quiet the question." (6) Lord Lyndhurst, in Small v. Attwood,(7) said that "the general rule is that all persons who are interested in the question must be parties to a suit instituted in a Court of Equity." A similar principle is expressed in Comyn's Digest, namely, "that all concerned in the demand ought to be made parties in Equity. Not all concerned in the subject-matter, respecting which a thing is demanded, but all concerned in the very thing which is demanded, in the matter petitioned for, in the prayer of the bill, or, in other words, in the object of the suit." But a person who has no interest should not be added, but only those whose claims must necessarily be taken into consideration before deciding on the plaintiff's title.(8)

The rule refers to two classes of parties—those who are indispensable and necessary, that is, those who "ought" to have been joined; and proper parties. Necessary parties defendants are those without whom no decree at all can be rendered; proper parties defendants are those whose presence renders the decree more effectual; and all the proper parties are those by whose presence the decree becomes a complete determination of all the questions which can arise, and of all the rights which are connected with the subject-matter of the controversy.(1) As a general rule, if the plaintiff applies in proper time, he is entitled to have a person added as a defendant if he had been entitled to join him originally.(2)

Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1859, it was one of the essential conditions of a person being added as a party by the Court, that he should "be entitled to" or claim "some share or interest in the subject-matter of the suit." It was not easy to determine what was the character of the interest which would satisfy the requirement of the rule.(3) It was held in some cases (4) that only such a person might be added as a party under that section as should have with either of the parties a community of interest, such as that of a joint owner, or a superior interest, such as that of a landlord, or an inferior interest, such as that of a tenant, or a substituted interest, such as that of the next of kin after a Hindu widow; (5) and that the interest of the person should not be such as would exclude the parties altogether from any share or interest in the subject-matter of the suit, as in such a case it would of course be very unlikely that new issues—which do not concern the original parties—should not arise, and that the party so claiming should be "likely to be affected by the result," (6) and thus fulfil the second requirement of the rule under the Code of 1859, permitting the addition of persons as parties. Thus, when a person was made a party on his alleging that he was the real proprietor, and the plaintiff only his benamidar, his addition as a party was held to have been wrong; as the issue thus raised was foreign to the suit.(7) And it was held "that upon a suit brought by a person claiming as landlord for arrears of rent, a third person is not to be allowed to intervene, and by setting up a superior claim to the landlord's title, to raise, as between himself and the original plaintiff, an entirely distinct question between new parties." (1) In a suit for ejectment against a certain person, other persons not claiming through him should not be added as parties, as they cannot be affected by the decision against him, and their addition would lead to issues altogether foreign to those between the original parties to the suit.(2)

In an ejectment suit by a landlord against his tenant, the Court should not bring on to the record the person from whom the plaintiff holds the land, nor persons claiming to hold it from a third party, nor any such third party himself; (3) the Court observing that "the case ought not to have been converted from a suit of one character into a suit of an entirely different character." In short, a person claiming adversely to both the parties should not be added as a party.(4)

In an ejectment suit, the person from whom the party in actual possession claims the holding may be, and is generally, made a party; but he is not a necessary party, and it is wrong for an Appellate Court for the first time to direct the plaintiff to make him a defendant.(5)

As to the interpretation put upon the expression "likely to be affected," see the corresponding section of the Code of 1859, and ante. The expression is not used in the present Code, but under the corresponding English rule it has been held that it is only of persons who or whose property will be directly and legally affected by the decision, that the presence may be said to "be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the cause or matter;" and that a person whose interest will be affected only indirectly and commercially cannot be made a party.(6)

The words "whose presence before the Court may be necessary" are very wide, but every person who is in any way connected with the transaction to which the suit refers has not necessarily such interest in or in connection with the suit that his presence must be considered to be necessary for the complete determination of it.(7) These words in the English rule have been held not to authorize a plaintiff, who has no right to sue, to amend by joining as co-plaintiff a person who has such right.(1) The object is only to improve the position of the plaintiff on record, and not to allow the suit instituted by one person to be converted in a new suit by another proper person. The same view has been taken in this country, it being held that a person can be added as plaintiff only in a suit which, though partially defective, is to some extent properly instituted, and in which the original plaintiff has some title to sue.(2) The Court should not add persons so as to introduce a right of action which previous thereto did not exist.(3) The rule under the Code of 1859 also was the same; and it was often held that when the plaintiff had no right of action against the defendants, he could not mend his case by joining as parties to the suit other persons who had a right of action against them.(4) In a suit by a purchaser of goods against the vendors for damages, on the ground that the bulk did not correspond with the sample, the persons who had agreed to sell the same to them cannot be made parties, as, though their presence would save great expense, and prevent further litigation, it could not be said to be necessary to an effectual and complete adjudication.(5) In the case cited, Pontifex, J., observed that the first vendor might be made a party under r. 18 of English O. 16, but that had not been embodied in the Code, and that he was not at liberty to construe this section as giving the power under clause 18 of O. XVI.

In accordance with the principles regulating the joinder of parties, it is a general rule that every person who has an interest in the subject of a suit may be added as a party. The interest must, however, be an existing one. Thus, in a suit by an adopted son against the widow for his father's property in her possession, it was held that a reversioner should not be made a co-defendant, as he had no interest at the time in the property, and his interest being contingent upon the death of the widow, it was a question whether he would ever have any interest at all.(6) But it is sufficient that the interest is in existence at the time of the addition, it not being necessary that the party added should have had a right at the time of the suit, or should have derived a right from an original plaintiff.(7) There can thus be no ground for adding those persons as parties who, according to the original defendants, should be interested in a portion of the property claimed, if the plaintiff withdraws his claim to that portion as against them.(8) It is on this principle that assignees pendente lite are in England, as well as in this country, generally added as parties.(1) In a recent Privy Council decision where a party had been joined as co-plaintiff, being, by virtue of an agreement with the other plaintiffs, a co-owner in an undivided share of the property claimed by them, it was held that he could not maintain the suit after the other plaintiffs had compromised their claim, for he had no present existing interest.(2) The necessity of the presence of persons other than the actual litigants on account of their interest in the subject of a suit generally arises in suits by or against co-owners, including members of joint families, and specially in suits for partition.(3) In suits against the karnavan by any member of the tarwad affecting the property or the rights of the tarwad, all the members of the tarwad must be parties actually or constructively.(4) On a similar principle in suits for partition of any property all the co-sharers must be parties.(5) The same principles apply to a dissolution of partnership, and in case of the death of one of the partners, his representatives must be impleaded as parties in a suit between the remaining partners for the taking of the accounts.(6) In a suit by a benamidar the real owner or his assignee may be added.(7) A mortgage bond was executed ostensibly in favour of R, but J was the real mortgagee. plaintiff or defendant.(1) The rule expressly provides for the addition, as parties, of persons "whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit." It has been held in some cases, that only those questions are deemed to be involved in the suit which arise between the original parties; and that where new questions will arise between them and any other person there is no justification for his joinder as a party.(2) On the same principle, it has even been held that if in an appeal a respondent dies, and on the appellant's application the name of a person is entered on the record as the respondent's representative, another person claiming to be such representative in lieu of him cannot be impleaded as a party under this section and sect. 107, as the question of representative title between the two persons is not a question involved in the suit.(3) In the case first cited it was held that the questions referred to in the section must be questions between the plaintiff and the defendant, and not such as may arise between co-plaintiffs and co-defendants inter se. In the second case the majority of the Full Bench held that a person who is not, in fact, the legal representative is not a person who ought to be joined, and that if the section applied it would be the duty of the Court to decide on the representative title. Mahmood, J., dissented from the decision of the majority of the Court, and held that the applicant had "shown a sufficient case to entitle her to be made a respondent without the condition precedent of any decision" as to her representative title to the deceased. The same view had been taken by the Madras High Court,(4) in which Turner, C.J., observed "that where there appears a substantial doubt whether the person indicated by the appellant is the representative of a deceased respondent or a representative for all purposes connected with the matters in litigation, and if a person other than the person indicated by the appellant lays claim to the representative character and on good primâ facie grounds, and where, if he be not allowed to join, the interests of the person entitled to the estate of the deceased may be prejudiced, we consider the Court ought to proceed under sect. 32 to make him a party to the appeal." The Madras High Court has in other cases also construed the expression under comment in a broad sense.(5) Thus,(6) a person who claimed to be jointly interested with the plaintiff in a bond on which the suit was brought was held to have been rightly made a party; the Court observing that the acceptance of a construction of the words restricting them to questions between the parties to the suit would involve the addition of the words "between the parties to the suit," and that "there can be few, if any, questions which cannot be determined between the parties to the suit one way or the other, and of which the determination, if they be material, will, as between the parties to the suit, not be final;" and "on the other hand, the interpretation warranted by the terms would enable the Court to avoid conflicting decisions on the same question which would work injustice to a party to the suit, and finally and effectually to put an end to litigation respecting them." In a suit against the personal representatives of the obligor of a bond, who was also the manager of a mutt, it was contended that the bond debt had been incurred for the mutt, and the successor in the management was held to have been properly made defendant.(1) The Calcutta High Court also took a broad view (2) of the expression in a case (3) in which certain lands belonging to a joint estate were held by one of the co-sharers under a private arrangement and let out by him to patnidars, and on partition they were allotted to another co-sharer, who, in a suit brought by him against the tenants for rent, impleaded the patnidars as defendants in order that the question of the tenants' liability might be decided in their presence; and the Court held "that they were properly made defendants in the suit and that the Courts were justified in trying the question of the right to receive the rent as between the plaintiffs and the patnidars," and that "the trial of that question was in truth necessary, in order to ascertain whether the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the tenant-defendants existed or not." The expression as used in the corresponding English rule also has received a broad but still a limited interpretation.(4) Thus it was said that the term "involved" was somewhat elastic, and might be so construed as to include a great number of subsidiary or collateral rights, but though it was difficult to define the meaning of it, there must be some reasonable limit.(5) Esher, M.R., said: "I can find no case which decides that we cannot construe the rule as enabling the Court under such circumstances to effectuate what was one of the great objects of the Judicature Acts, namely, that, where there is one subject-matter out of which several disputes arise, all parties may be brought before the Court, and all those disputes may be determined at the same time without the delay and expense of several actions and trials." Representative suits.—See notes to O. I. r. 8.

Sub-rule (4).—Defendant added; amendment of plaint.—This rule, which corresponds with sect. 33 of the last Code, is taken from O. XVI. r. 13 of the Rules under the Judicature Act, but some confusion crept into the wording of that section in its modification with reference to the Indian law. The words "if previously filed" thus appeared to be unnecessary; and what was intended to be served on the new and the original defendant was evidently not only "an amended copy of the summons," but an amended copy of the plaint.(4) The rule has now been amended so as to include service of a copy of the plaint. The rule does not contemplate that, upon the addition of defendants to a suit, a cause of action different from that upon which the suit was founded, which may have occurred to the plaintiff against the added defendants, should be added to the claim. All that it requires is, that when a defendant is added the plaint should be amended in such manner as may be necessary, and that an amended copy of the summons and plaint be served on the defendants. The amendment there referred to is such amendment as is necessitated by the addition of a defendant, and not such an amendment as would add to or alter the nature of the suit as originally brought.(5)

Sub-rule (5).—"Subject to the provisions."—This clause formerly commenced with the words "All parties whose names are so added, etc." According to a strict construction of the section, these words referred to all the previous clauses of the section, and therefore also to cases in which the Court had made a person a defendant of its own motion. The power of a Court to add a party and the duty of that Court to dismiss the suit as barred by limitation are two different questions, and a Court may under this section add a party necessary to a suit, although it may be obliged by the Limitation Act to dismiss such suit after such party has been added.(6) It had, however, been held (it is submitted erroneously) that no question of limitation could be raised by a defendant who has been added by order of Court after the period of limitation. But it has been held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that a Court acting under the second paragraph of sect. 32 of the last Code is bound by the provisions of sect. 22 of the Limitation Act.(7) Sect. 22 of the Limitation Act, which is the section generally applicable, does not apply where really new persons are not made defendants, but only the names of those already so are expressly mentioned, as where a clerical error is corrected,(1) or where the persons are comprised in the designation given.(2)

"Shall be deemed to have begun."—It has been pointed out (3) that it is peculiar that this provision is different from that in sect. 22 of the Indian Limitation Act, under which the suit is deemed to have been instituted in regard to a person when he is made a party. The effect of the law of limitation in regard to the joinder of defendants under the present section is, that if the period of limitation for a suit against the added defendant shall have expired before the service of summons, and the claim against the original defendant is such as cannot proceed without joining as defendant the person against whom the claim is barred, the entire claim will fail even as against the original defendant. Thus a pre-emption claim against one of the joint vendees will fail if the summons is not served on his co-vendee till after the expiry of the period of limitation for a suit for the claim,(4) even though the delay in the service may not be due to the plaintiff. Where in a suit a person is added as a party defendant at the instance of the Court after the period of limitation, sect. 22 of the Limitation Act applies, and bars the plaintiff's remedy as against the added defendant.(5)

There is no reference in this section to the Indian Limitation Act in regard to persons joined as plaintiffs, but sect. 22 of the Act applies also to the case of joinder of a plaintiff, where the joinder is under clause 2 as well as when it is under clause 1.(6)

Appeal.—See sect. 104 and O. XLIII. r. 1, and notes thereto. The Code of 1882 gave an appeal from certain orders under sect. 588, clause 2. All orders under sect. 32 were not appealable; but where there was no appeal the order might have been attacked under sect. 591 of the former Code on appeal from the final decree.(7) An order based on an erroneous construction of the section was held not subject to revision under sect. 622, corresponding with sect. 115, post.(8) A party who had assented to an order could not, of course, complain of it in appeal.(9) Where an order adding a defendant under this section was not appealed against, and no objection was taken thereto in the memorandum of appeal, an oral objection taken on appeal to such order was disallowed.(10)

Under the present Code no direct appeal is given and the same rule as to revision will apply. The Code may, however, be objected to in the appeal from the final decree under sect. 105, post.

11. The Court may give the conduct of the suit to such person as it deems proper.

Conduct of suit.

Conduct of suit.—This rule was originally part of sect. 32 of the last Code which referred to conduct of suit by the plaintiff. The word "suit" does not ordinarily include defence, but, according to the English practice, the conduct of the defence also is often given to one of the defendants; as for instance when a surviving partner of a partnership was made a co-defendant as one of the executors of a deceased partner, the conduct of the defence was given to the other executor on the ground that the interests of the surviving partner might conflict with those of the estate of the deceased partner.(1) Apparently with a view to adopt that practice, the word "person" has been substituted for plaintiff.

12. (1) Where there are more plaintiffs than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any proceeding; and in like manner, where there are more defendants than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any proceeding.

Appearance of one of several plaintiffs or defendants for others.

(2) The authority shall be in writing signed by the party giving it and shall be filed in Court.

Appearance by one of several plaintiffs or defendants.—O. III. r. 1 enacts that parties may appear and act themselves personally in all suits. The present rule provides for the actual representation of a party to a suit in the course of its progress by another party on the same side, and O. III. r. 1 lastly enacts that a party may, unless the Court otherwise directs, be represented by a stranger to the suit, namely, by a professional adviser or by certain recognized agents specified in O. III. r. 2, post. It was held under the corresponding section of the Code of 1859 (sect. 115), that it was sufficient if the authority was in writing, and that no general power of attorney was necessary.(2)

13. All objections on the ground of non-joinder or misjoinder of parties shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived.

Objections as to non-joinder or misjoinder.

"Objections."—The objection dealt with by this rule is one for joinder

or misjoinder of parties. It does not refer to objections on the ground of want of a cause of action or right of suit in the plaintiff, which may not be disclosed until the case has been proceeded with and evidence has been taken.(1) In the case of objections with which the rule does deal, the question whether there is or is not a want of parties in any particular case will depend on the substantive law applicable to it. The rule of procedure does nothing more than provide that certain rules of substantive law can only be enforced or given effect to in a particular way or under particular limitations. So while sect. 45 of the Contract Act is a matter of substantive law, the rule includes an objection for want of a co-promisee as a plaintiff, it being intended to be a restriction on the right or necessity, as the case may be, of joint-promisors or promisees to sue or be sued together, just as other limitation and procedure rules are virtually restrictions on the exercise of rights which, but for them, would exist and be enforceable.(2) O. II. r. 7 enacts a similar rule as regards causes of action.

"At the earliest possible opportunity."—The necessity for this provision and that in O. II. r. 7 is founded on the fact that if the objection is taken in time, the plaintiff may take steps to join the persons whose non-joinder may be objected to,(3) or remedy the misjoinder of claims objected to. The first hearing of a suit may, however, be the earliest opportunity a defendant may have of raising the objection, which, if taken in the defendant's written statement, cannot be considered too late.(4) But the grounds of objection must have existed before the first hearing, otherwise an objection could not have been made or waived. If it did not so exist an objection may be made after the first hearing at the earliest opportunity after it came into existence.(5) The time now fixed is the settlement of issues. As pointed out in the first of the cases last cited, "cases might occur in which sect. 34 would not prevent the defendant from objecting to the want of a proper party even after the first hearing, viz. where, after the first hearing and before decree, a co-parcener or remainderman or reversioner is born, or where a woman (who is a party) is married to a man who is not a party to the suit. The objection did not exist at or before the first hearing, and therefore could not have been made or waived by the defendant, and if he made it at the earliest opportunity after it came into existence, he would have satisfied the spirit of sect. 34." The section has been amended accordingly.

If the objection is admitted by the plaintiff, the Court should, in the case of parties; act under O. I. r. 10, and not dismiss the suit,(6) and the Court may, where it is possible, whether the defendant omits to object (1) or objects and the plaintiff refuses to admit the objection, exercise of its own motion the powers given by that rule. If the objection when taken is not admitted by the plaintiff, and he does not apply to amend, but maintains the correctness of the plaint, and the Court, without immediately deciding the point, tries the case, and at its conclusion finds that the objection is good on facts proved by the defendant, the suit must be dismissed.(2)

"Waived."—Where an objection as to misjoinder (3) or of non-joinder (4) is not taken in the Court of first instance it will be disallowed in appeal, and the claim will be disposed of on the merits. In Dhirm Das v. Shama Soondri,(5) the plaintiff widow made an adoption pending the suit, but the son was not made a party, and on an objection being taken as to that before the Privy Council, Lord Campbell spoke of it as "a safe maxim for a Court of Appeal to be governed by, that an objection, which, if taken, might have been cured, and which has not been taken in the Court below, shall not be taken in the Court of Appeal." And see now sect. 99, which amends the former sect. 578 so as to include cases of misjoinder. The former section concluded with the words "by the defendant." It was pointed out (6) that these words showed that the section did not limit the right of the plaintiff to add parties at any stage of the proceedings. Thus, in the case cited it was said: "Often a defendant may be indifferent to the absence of persons who ought to be parties; but it, nevertheless, may be most important for the plaintiff to add them in order that they may be bound by the decree in the cause. The plaintiff may not, until an advanced stage in a cause, become aware that persons ought to be made parties who have not been so made. The defendant may be well aware that those ought to be made parties, but purposely lets the first hearing pass without objecting to their absence from the suit, and thus, so far as he is concerned, waives the right to object. But his waiver of that objection would not affect the absent parties, and a decree made in their absence would not bind them. Hence it is that, although sect. 34 limits the defendant's right to object, the second passage of sect. 32 (corresponding with sect. 29), leaves it open to the plaintiff 'at any time' before decree to obtain permission to make new parties." The words have now been omitted as unnecessary.

ORDER II.

Frame of Suit.

Frame of suit.

1. Every suit shall as far as practicable be framed so as to afford ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation concerning them.

Suit to include the whole claim.

2. (1) Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court.

Relinquishment of part of claim.

(2) Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished.

Omission to sue for one of several reliefs.

(3) A person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of such reliefs; but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs, he shall not afterwards sue for any relief so omitted.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this rule an obligation and a collateral security for its performance and successive claims arising under the same obligation shall be deemed respectively to constitute but one cause of action.

Illustration.

A lets a house to B at a yearly rent of Rs.1,200. The rent for the whole of the years 1905, 1906 and 1907 is due and unpaid. A sues B in 1908 only for the rent due for 1906. A shall not afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1905 or 1907.

Previous provisions.—The terms of sect. 7 of the Code of 1859, and of sect. 43 of the last Code, so far as regards the first two paragraphs, did not vary materially. The former declared that "every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action." The last Code substitutes the words "which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of," (1) and the clause "but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court" were added. The cases therefore decided under the Code of 1859 were in point,(2) so far as these two paragraphs were concerned. The last two paragraphs were, however, new, and were introduced to do away with the view taken under the Code of 1859, that the plaintiff, though prohibited from splitting his claim, was not bound to pursue all his remedies at once.(3) This section in the Code of 1882 was therefore, in this respect, more comprehensive in that it provided that a person entitled to more remedies than one in respect of the same cause of action must combine all his remedies in the first suit, unless he obtained the leave of the Court to reserve some of his remedies for a subsequent suit.(4) The present rules are in substantially the same terms as the corresponding sections in the last Code, with the exception of the omission in clause 3 of r. 2 of the words "obtained before the first hearing," as to which, see post.

The section enacts the general rule that "contestants are not allowed to split up a cause of action, even where they have an election of different remedies, into different actions, or to supplement an incomplete remedy they may have selected at the first by availing themselves subsequently of another." (5)

Principle and scope of the two rules.—R. 1 contains provisions of a positive and directory character as to the framing of the suit with a view to procure finality of decision.(6) Where, however, it was argued that the phrase "the subjects in dispute" in the former section connoted the corpus or object-matter of the claim, and that therefore all possible claims to the same should necessarily be offered for decision in the suit, the Madras High Court (7) said: "In our opinion the expression 'the subjects in dispute' signifies the general relation between the parties to the suit for the determination of which the suit is brought. In other words, the object of sect. 42 (now r. 1) is to require the plaintiff to bring forward his whole case as to the matter of litigation on the question of right involved in the suit, and not to require him to unite all the causes of action which he may have against the defendant in respect of the corpus or object-matter of the suit." In this respect, therefore, r. 1 bears the same construction as r. 2, in which there is nothing to warrant the inference that all causes of action ought to be included in the alternative, or otherwise, in one and the same suit.(1) The penalty for non-compliance with r. 1 is provided for partly in r. 2 and partly by Explanation IV. to sect. 11. The former provides that if the plaintiff omits to include a portion of the entire claim, which has arisen at the date of the suit, out of the cause of action on which the suit is based, he shall be precluded from suing again in respect of such portion; and the latter provides that the matter of every ground which the plaintiff might and ought to urge in support of the cause of action on which the suit is founded shall be deemed to be a matter directly and substantially in issue in the suit, and decided therein whether such ground was actually relied upon or not in the suit. In other words, r. 2 requires that the whole claim which has arisen, at the date of the suit, out of the cause of action shall be included in the suit so as to avoid splitting of a claim or claims arising out of one and the same cause of action. And Explanation IV. to sect. 11 enjoins that every ground which could and ought to have been urged in support of the claim actually made in the suit, shall be deemed to have been adjudicated upon therein, whether it was actually urged or not.(2) The rule embodied in r. 2 does not operate to give the defendant a ground of exception to the first suit, but by prohibiting a second suit it indirectly compels the plaintiff to include his whole demand in the first suit,(3) and is thus a complement to r. 1. To illustrate the operation of r. 2 over the second suit and not the first: where the plaintiff claimed, by right of inheritance, for partition of one out of a number of villages left by his ancestor, and the lower Court dismissed the claim as untenable under the corresponding section of the Code of 1859, the Appellate Court held that though that section might operate as a bar to any future claim by plaintiff for partition of the remaining villages by right of inheritance it could not be taken to be a bar to the then present claim.(4)

R. 2, which provides against what is called the splitting of a cause of action, is founded on the maxim that no one shall be twice vexed for one and the same cause.(5) It is directed against two evils, the splitting of claims and the splitting of remedies in respect of one cause of action. If a man omits from his suit a portion of his claim he shall not afterwards sue in respect of it; if he omits one of his remedies he cannot afterwards pursue it.(6) It has been said that there is no rule of procedure which is founded on better reason and good sense.(7) At the same time, it has been pointed out that while in order to effect the good object of preventing unnecessary litigation, suitors are deprived of rights to which they would otherwise be entitled under the general law, the Courts should be careful in carrying out these provisions to confine their scope and construction within certain recognized limits and principles so as not to take suitors unfairly by surprise and to do as little injustice as possible in individual cases.(1) So far as regards the party sought to be barred, the principle is that where the cause of action is the same and the plaintiff has had an opportunity in the former suit of recovering and procuring what he seeks to recover in the second, the latter suit is barred.(2) The distinction between this rule and that of res judicata is that whereas the latter rule prescribes that what has been decided or is deemed to have been decided cannot be raised again, the present rule prohibits that being put forward which should have been, but was not, offered for the Court's decision, and in respect of which in consequence of such omission no decision has been given. The present rule depends entirely on the identity of the cause of action, the bar being created by the institution of the suit and not by the judgment.(3) The bar exists not because the point has been decided but because it should and would have been decided if the plaintiff had put it forward.

The plea under r. 2, it has been held,(4) does not involve a question of jurisdiction, and no Court is bound to take it up proprio motu. As it is introduced simply for the benefit of a defendant, to prevent him being harassed by numerous suits, he should expressly plead it before judgment, if he wishes to take advantage of it. Further, where objection is taken to the suit the onus is on the defendant to show that the causes of action are identical and that the suit is therefore barred ; (5) and he cannot in this, any more than in any other matter, plead his own wrong.(6)

The former section has been held applicable to suits under the N.W.P.

There cannot, however, be any doubt that the rule, if applied properly, is one of justice and not mere technicality. In this as in other respects, if injustice ensue, it must be laid not to the rule but to its improper application to cases not falling within it, as pointed out in Herm. Comm., § 220, cited in Hukm Chand, C. P. C. 499. If a party may divide a single and entire cause of action once, there can be no limit but the caprice and the will of the party to endless divisions, and the rule therefore is designed to suppress a serious grievance. D. 57, where it was held that a party was not at liberty to retain the benefit of a decision given on the footing that his liability under a covenant continued, and at the same time to insist that his liability under it had determined.

Rent Act,(1) as also to suits under Act X. of 1859, the principle on which it is based being one of general equity; (2) but not to suits under the Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act, that Act having been amended so as to remove the bar created by this rule.(3) The Act of a guardian binds a minor unless unreasonable or improper, and the rule is therefore a bar to a suit by a minor who has attained majority and whose guardian had previously relinquished a claim.(4) The rule does not apply where there has been no adjudication and leave has been specially granted to bring a fresh suit.(5)

"Suit."—The word does not here apply to execution proceedings. R. 2 deals with the frame and initiatory stages of a suit, and is not applicable after judgment and after the rights of the parties have been decided by a decree, in which the cause of action has merged, to proceedings in execution, any more than, for example, sect. 44 of the last Code (or O. II. rr. 4, 5 of this) would be applicable.(6) The question as to the applicability of the principle embodied in the section might arise in two ways. Firstly, where the decree gives reliefs of a different character, such as a decree for possession and a decree for costs. There is nothing in the Code to prevent separate and successive applications for execution as regards each of them.(7) Secondly, relief of a single character may be given by a money decree for, say, Rs.1000. The Full Bench in the first-mentioned case reserved its opinion whether in such a case the plaintiff would be entitled to split up the execution of the decree by successive applications to execute to the extent, for instance, of Rs.10. The rule has been held not to apply in a case where there were two suits, and where one being struck off on the objection of the defendant, the plaintiff applied and was allowed to amend his claim in the other suit.(8) An application to file an award is in many respects analogous to a suit, and therefore the privilege given to a plaintiff in a suit to abandon portion of the claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of the Court has been held to apply also to a case where the party comes in with an application to cause an arbitration award to be filed.(9) As to whether a proceeding for revocation of probate is a suit or not, see case cited.(10)

"Shall include."—Ordinarily a claim is expressly specified. In some cases, however, the claim in the prior suit will be construed to include a claim which, though not specially stated, is naturally implied in it. So a prior suit for redemption of land was held to have included the trees on the land, and the Court having failed to adjudicate upon the portion of the claim relating to the trees, a fresh suit based on it was competent to the plaintiff.(1) If a mortgagor in a suit for redemption of an usufructuary mortgage omits to claim surplus profits, a subsequent suit for the recovery of such profits is barred by this section.(2) The omission in a prior suit against one of several joint promisors of a part of the cause of action is no bar under sect. 43 of the last Code (now represented by this rule) to a subsequent suit against another joint promisor for the portion so omitted.(3) A plaintiff who omits to sue for a portion of his claim, stating that he does not relinquish it but means to sue again for it, can gain nothing by such statement; but, on the other hand, neither can such a statement furnish a reason for holding the first suit to be barred.(4) As regards a plaintiff's claim for relief, he must either include it or obtain the leave of the Court to omit it, if he does neither he is barred.(5)

"The plaintiff."—It has been held that a defendant's claim to set-off stands in the position of a claim by a plaintiff in a separate suit, and that he may, in relation to his cross-claim, be rightly regarded as a plaintiff within the meaning of the section.(6)

Conditions of applicability of the rule.—The main conditions, the existence of which is necessary for the applicability of the rule, and which are dealt with in detail hereafter, are: (a) the existence of a cause of action in the prior suit; (b) which was known to the party; (c) and which the Court had jurisdiction to try; and (d) the identity of parties; and (e) of the cause of action, the meaning of which last-mentioned term in connection with the subject is subsequently defined and exemplified by reference to cases of tort, contract, and of a miscellaneous character.

(a) Existence of cause of action in prior suit presupposed.—The first thing to be considered is whether the cause of action in the second suit is the same as in the first. If so, but not otherwise, the second suit is barred in respect of any portion of the claim which was omitted from the first suit.(7) Where there is an infringement of one right and one cause of action has arisen, the plaintiff must make his whole claim once for all in one suit. If the plaintiff had thus an opportunity in the former suit of recovering what he seeks in the second, the former suit is a bar to the latter action.(8) But this rule, which requires the whole claim to be put forward, presupposes the existence of a cause of action and will have no application where it is found that the former suit had no cause of action. This will generally be the case when the former suit was dismissed as premature, in which case the claim may be put forward in a suit brought on the maturing of the cause of action.(9)

There is no bar if the plaintiff had in fact no cause of action in respect of his claim at the date of the institution of the prior suit and so could not have sued or properly sued,(1) and where nothing is decided but that should he sue again.(2) In short, only the claim which the plaintiff is able to make must be put forward, and only so much of the claim is required to be included as the plaintiff may be able to make at the time of institution of the suit.(3) If, further, a person has a claim by reason of the defendant's default, but is entitled to waive it and does so, he is not precluded by such waiver from enforcing his claim in the case of a subsequent default, the cause of action not being the same.(4)

(b) Which was known to the party.—An omission to sue can only be a bar when the claim was known at the date of the institution of the first suit. A right which a litigant possesses without knowing or ever having known that he possesses it can hardly be regarded as a "portion of his claim" within the meaning of the section.(5) A person cannot, moreover, omit or relinquish that of which he has no knowledge. The provision as to omitting a claim clearly involves the idea that the plaintiff so omitting was, at some time prior to the suit, aware or informed of the claim, or aware of the facts which would

ive him a cause of action.(1) It has also been held that where the facts have een fraudulently concealed, the fraud gives a new cause of action on which the econd suit may be brought (2) Where, however, a person knows of the facts efore the institution of the suit and omits to make a particular claim by an versight, it is no answer to say that such omission was due to mere mistake, nd was not actuated by any fraudulent or dishonest motive. If the words f a law are clear and positive, they cannot be contested by any con- ideration of the motives of the party to whom it is to be applied, nor limited y what the Judges who apply it may suppose to have been the reasons or enacting it.(3) Nor, where the plaintiff is aware of his cause of action, s it necessary that the amount of damages resulting therefrom should e known or even be capable of being known. So it is a general principle n cases of breach of contract or tort, that where there is but one cause f action damages must be assessed once for all.(4) In some cases of wrong the ause of suit is not complete until actual damage has ensued; but when once ne cause of suit is matured, the subsequent occurrence of further damage, hether after or before this has been adjudicated upon, does not originate fresh cause of suit; were it otherwise, litigation might have no end, for in few ases does the damage flowing from a wrong or breach of contract cease with ne event.(5) Therefore, as regards damage actually incurred, all must be laimed, and as regards those which have not actually accrued at date of suit, that , future or prospective damage, those not known may be estimated, and are erefore, in contemplation of law, deemed to be known, and must be claimed or once for all.(6)

(c) And which the Court had jurisdiction to try.—It is obvious at a plaintiff is not debarred from having a matter tried in a second suit if y reason of the absence of necessary jurisdiction it could not be heard in the rst. to avail himself of, he cannot sue again. A reasonable construction must be put upon the section, and the words "whole" claim must be understood with the qualification, "in so far as it is cognizable by the Court in which the suit can be lawfully entertained."(1) It was intended to prohibit a second suit when the whole claim arising out of the cause of action was within the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court in which the plaintiff had brought his first suit, or such suit had been made cognizable by the Court in point of pecuniary value by the relinquishment of a portion of the plaintiff's claim under the express provision in the same section.(2) If the first Court had, in fact, no jurisdiction in respect of the claim, or any portion of it, the plaintiff need not, and indeed could not, have sued. If, in the same circumstances, and in the belief that a Court has jurisdiction, a party does sue, he cannot be said to relinquish or omit a claim which is put forward, even though erroneously. If, therefore, as in the first case next mentioned, a party sues and obtains a decree which is infructuous for want of jurisdiction, or, as in the second case, he is refused a decree, he is not precluded from suing again. Where the cause of action was not split because the plaintiff did not in the first case either relinquish or omit to sue for any portion of his claim, and the necessity for the second suit arose out of the fact that the decree in the first suit was infructuous so far as regarded a certain portion of the property, in consequence of its having been made without jurisdiction, the section was held not to apply.(3) And where a plaintiff had a right to sue his mortgagor for the mortgage debt in the Court within whose jurisdiction the mortgagor resided, the fact that he erroneously claimed in that suit relief against the lands which that Court had no jurisdiction to give, and therefore refused, did not bar a subsequent suit in the proper Court to enforce the mortgage by sale of the mortgaged property.(4) The principle has been held to apply even where the jurisdiction might have existed with a permission, which was never applied for. So, where at the date of the former suit the land in respect of which the subsequent suit was brought was subject to provisions which deprived the Courts of jurisdiction, except where authority was given by Government to entertain a particular suit, it was held not obligatory on a plaintiff to obtain the permission of Government. The latter was not bound to give the Courts jurisdiction, and might possibly refuse it, or might give it after such a lapse of time as would be a bar to a party proceeding with the rest of his claim. Innes, J., said: "If at the time of a cause of action so arising to a plaintiff, or in the interval between that and a subsequent date, any part of his claim is not cognizable by the Court, it cannot, I think, be intended that he must postpone his suit for the cognizable portion of his claim until the Court acquires jurisdiction over the portion at present uncognizable, or be barred of all future remedy for the recovery of that portion." (1) Under the Code of 1859, where property was in two districts, it was necessary to apply to the High Court under sect. 12 of that Code for sanction of the trial. It was held in some cases that a plaintiff was not bound to include all such properties in one suit, and to apply for sanction, and that he might sue separately in each district.(2) The Calcutta High Court, however, held that a plaintiff should include all properties and apply for sanction.(3) Sanction, however, is no longer necessary for the exercise of jurisdiction over the whole property by a Court in which any portion of it is situate, and the plaintiff has now an absolute right to sue for the whole of the property situate in several districts, in any one of such districts. A suit, therefore, for partition must include the property in all the districts, and a suit for partition of property in any one district will not be allowed.(4) The principle applies to defect of material as of local jurisdiction. The former Court must have had jurisdiction to try the particular question raised in the second suit. Where the former suit was instituted in the Revenue Court, a subsequent suit in the Civil Court is not barred in respect of a matter not triable by the Revenue Court.(5)

(d) Parties must be the same.—Not merely must both suits arise out of the same cause of action, but they must be between the same parties, or between parties under whom they, or any of them, claim.(6) This rule bars a second suit only when the plaintiff in that suit was also the plaintiff in the first.(7) But if a person would have been barred, so will a person claiming through him as heir,(8) or assignee. And as a plaintiff having an entire demand cannot divide it into distinct parts, and maintain separate actions upon each: by parity of reason he cannot by an assignment enable others to do it.(9) In the under-mentioned case (10) it was held that the Advocate-General as plaintiff in that suit was barred by a decree in a previous suit under this section. The trustees in that suit, having then omitted to ask for an account, could not sue again. The Advocate-General represented the same interests as they did, and was therefore equally bound. It was, however, held that even if that were not the case, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, would not direct the account asked for. As regards defendants, however, it is to be observed that this rule has reference to the subject-matter of the claim, and not to the persons against whom it may be made.(1) It occurs in an Order which relates to the frame of a suit, and not to the array of parties. It lays down no rule as to who is to be impleaded as a defendant, and does no more than provide that the plaintiff must include, in the relief he asks for in his plaint, the whole claim he is entitled to make in respect of his cause of action against the defendant. It nowhere prescribes that where one person has two distinct causes of action, different in their nature and in their incidents, respecting the same property, one against one person, and one against another, he is bound to join those causes of action in one suit.(2) Not only must the plaintiff be the same, but the bar applies only to a suit against the same defendant.(3) This rule does not affect that which lays down the principle of bar for jointness. The principle of the maxim, Nemo debet bis vexari, applies not only to the case of one individual being sued twice for the same cause of action, but also to the case of a person suing twice on the same contract.(4) The rule that a decision against a joint, not joint and several, contractor, or a joint tortfeasor, is a bar to a suit against another contractor or tortfeasor, while proceeding also on the ground of unity of cause of action, is based on a different principle, viz. merger of the right of action in a judgment.(5)

(e) And there must be identity of the cause of action.—In order that the action should be a bar, the cause of action must be the same in both suits; both claim and remedy have reference to the same cause of action. The rule has no application where the causes are distinct. The rule does not compel a plaintiff, who has several causes of action, to lump them together under the penalty of having a subsequent suit barred. It applies only where there has been a splitting of a single cause of action. As pointed out by the Privy Council, the "section does not say that every suit shall include every cause of action, or every claim which the party has, but every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action, meaning the cause of action for which the suit is brought." (1) It has also been held, in the under-mentioned case,(2) that a plaintiff was not bound to alter the nature of his suit upon the addition, at their own instance, of certain persons as defendants. In this case a suit had been brought by A for the recovery of certain moveable property. Two persons were in possession of a house, which, as well as the moveable property, had originally belonged to the same person. They were, on their own application, added as defendants. In a subsequent suit by A's son to recover the house, it was held that his father was not bound to set up a claim to the house in the first suit against the added defendants. To have done so would have been to alter the nature of the suit as originally brought, and to have offended against the provisions of sect. 44 of the last Code and O. II. rr. 4, 5 of this.

As in the case of res judicata, the claims in the two suits must have been made under the same title. The plaintiff must not only be the same person, but he must be suing in the same right. Thus, a suit for damages, under Lord Campbell's Act (corresponding to Indian Act XIII. of 1855), is no bar to a suit for damages suffered by the personal estate and effects of the deceased, inasmuch as the action under the Act is not connected with the estate of the deceased, and the damages recovered form no part of that estate; whereas the second action is brought by the executor or administrator as representing the estate of the testator or intestate.(3)

In order to determine whether in any case the causes of action in the two suits are the same, it is necessary to determine what was the cause of action in the former suit, and this cause of action, it has been held, must be sought for between the four corners of the plaint.(1) The Court has not to see how the facts stood upon the finding of the Court in the first suit. The question to be determined turns not upon what was the proper suit for the plaintiff to have brought, or the proper remedies for him to have applied for, having regard to the facts as found upon the trial of the first suit, but upon whether the causes of action alleged in the plaints in the two suits are one and the same, or are distinct.(2) The cause of action as alleged in the plaint cannot be altered by the result of the suit.(3) So where a suit for confirmation of possession is dismissed upon the ground that the plaintiff is not in possession, such suit is no bar to another for recovery of possession.(4) And in the under-mentioned case (5) it was held that there was nothing in the former section which would justify the Court in going behind two bonds to consider the circumstances out of which they sprang, albeit those circumstances might themselves at the time constitute a cause of action.

Meaning of "cause of action."—The meaning of the term "cause of action" has been discussed in the notes to sect. 20 and O. I. r. 1, ante. The question of the identity of the cause of action in the two suits will depend considerably on the circumstance whether, in cases other than those in which the cause consists merely of a right, the term is used in its restricted sense of the infringement of a right; or in the wider sense both of the right and its infringement. The wider the meaning which is attached to the term "cause of action," the more restricted is the operation of the section; for if the term is composed of only one element, there is more likelihood of the identity of the two suits than where their identity is required in all of several elements. The term has, in connection with this section, been defined in a number of cases in its wider sense, (6) though there are others in which the term appears to have been understood, though not expressly stated to have been used, in its restricted sense.(1)

It was said of the last Code that the term "cause of action" had not been used in all its sections in precisely the same sense.(2) It is to be construed with reference rather to the substance than to the form of action.(3) The test has been said to be whether the same evidence and arguments apply in the two cases.(4)

The cause of action must be distinguished from the subject-matter (5) of the suit, as well as from the relief (6) claimed. The words have no relation whatever to the defence, but refer to the grounds set forth in the plaint.(7)

The test, however, was not accepted by Edge, C.J., in Murti v. Bhola Ram, 16 A. 165, 173 (1893); and in Anderson, Wright & Co. v. Kalagurla, 12 C. 339 (1885); Garth, C.J., held that the different actions required different evidence, though Wilson, J., held that the former s. 43 applied on the ground that though there were several breaches they were under one contract. (7) Dampanaboyina v. Addala, 25 M. 736, 739 (1902), in which also, at pp. 745–747, the distinction between "cause of action" and "same matter," in s. 26 of the former Code, is pointed out.

If the causes of action in two suits are separate, the fact that the suit which might have preceded in point of time has actually been posterior does not affect the question.(1) Nor does the fact that joinder of claims might be made without being open to the charge of multifariousness take away the plaintiff's right to bring separate suits in respect of separate causes of action. Because a plaintiff has not formerly availed himself of the right to join separate claims when that is permissible, that is no objection under this section to a subsequent suit.(2)

Prior valid causes of action cannot be made into one by a transaction which is inoperative in law and challenged as such in the suit. So a suit to cancel a release, obtained by duress, of all claims against defendants, and to recover the amount of one such claim, was held to be no bar to subsequent suits upon other causes of action so released.(3) The same rule applies if a document is inadmissible in evidence, and, in consequence, a party sues on the original transaction prior to such document. So where a balance was found due between the parties, and a promissory note was executed providing for its payment by instalments, and the note being inadmissible for want of stamp, the plaintiff had to sue on the original transaction, he was held to be bound to sue for the full amount, and a suit for the amount due for some of the instalments provided for in the note was held to bar a subsequent suit for the balance.(4)

The duty to obey a foreign judgment is a new and separate cause of action from that of the original cause of action to which the judgment gave effect.(5)

Each right which gives a right of action, as also, as a general rule, distinct acts, constitute separate causes of action.(6) So as regards separate rights; a cause of action in respect of injury to a proprietary or permanent interest in an estate is not the same as that in respect of injury to a temporary or leasehold interest; (7) and the cause of action accruing to a co-sharer by reason of exclusion from joint possession is not the same as that which he possesses to have the joint estate partitioned; (8) nor is the cause of action the same in a suit to recover possession of land upon the strength of alleged title thereto, and a suit based on the fact that there was no title, and that for the consideration money plaintiff got nothing.(1) And when plaintiff had first sued for ejectment in the Revenue Court and afterwards for rent prior to ejectment under sect. 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act of 1901, it was held that the causes of action were distinct and that the latter suit was not barred by rule 2 of this Order.(2) A right of a Mahomedan widow to dower is distinct from a right to a life-interest in the estate of her deceased husband.(3) Similarly, a suit for maintenance is distinct from a subsequent claim for a share in ancestral property.(4) If a suit for partition has been brought, but for some reason the properties have not been actually divided by the decree made therein, it is open to any one of the joint owners to maintain a subsequent suit for partition.(5) A Burmese Buddhist husband's suit for divorce is distinct from his suit for partition based on divorce.(6)

Torts.—As a general rule, every tort is a separate and indivisible cause of action. So a claim in respect of a distinct prior tort need not be included in a suit on a subsequent one, and will not be barred by the suit on that other,(7) even though the suit brought might have embraced the claims on both the torts.(8) Each of several wrongful alienations of property constitutes a separate cause of action.(9) A suit for recovery of land A from X is no bar to a suit for the recovery of land from Y, though the title thereto is the same, and the causes of action may have arisen at the same time, both the persons withholding and the property being different.(10) An act prejudicially affecting more than one person gives to each a separate cause of action, as if the act done to each were separate. So a libel against several persons has often been held to afford a separate cause of action to each.(11)

Even in the case of the same person, if his rights in several capacities are infringed, there will be a separate cause of action to him, inasmuch as he will be considered in each case as if he were a distinct person.(1) Where the plaintiff's right is infringed by more persons than one, and by different acts done separately by each of them, the plaintiff has a separate cause of action against each of those persons.(2) A tort, though connected with a contract, constitutes a distinct cause of action from breach of the contract, and so a suit for the hire of a carriage will not bar a suit for the injury done to it during the hirer's use of it.(3) And so as regards distinct acts constituting distinct causes of action; where, for instance, some co-sharers sell their shares on different dates to different persons; each sale gives a distinct and separate cause of action to the remaining co-sharer claiming all the shares sold by right of pre-emption.(4) So also a suit on an unduly stamped instrument, for which the plaintiff had to pay duty and penalty, does not bar a suit for recovery of amount so paid,(5) there being two distinct causes of action, one of which accrued since the institution of the former suit. Unity of title to different properties injured does not make the different acts causing the injuries a single tort. So a man's right to enjoy a piece of land may depend upon one and the same title; but if he is ejected from different parts of it by distinct acts of ouster, each act of ouster would constitute a distinct and separate cause of action.(6) There is, it is submitted, no question but that there is no unity of cause of action in such cases where there is no unity in the act of dispossession, even though the plaintiff's title may be one and the same. So, conversely, if the alleged wrongs be distinct and separable, committed by several persons, and proceeding from no combination or conspiracy of such persons, the wrong-doers must respectively be sued separately in respect of their own misfeasance, and not collectively in respect of wrongs to which they have been neither directly nor indirectly parties.(1) A question may, however, arise as to the unity of the cause of action where there is unity of the act of dispossession, that is, infringement, but different rights infringed. If the term "cause of action" be given its wider sense, then in such cases it cannot be said that there is identity of cause of action. It has, however, been held that it is not the title upon which a party relies, but the infringement of it, which constitutes his cause of action.(2) The fact that a defendant's title rests upon different and distinct transactions, supported by distinct and separate evidence, does not necessarily imply that to a party contesting that title there are different causes of action warranting separate suits.(3) The unity of a tortious act is not affected by the different modes in which it causes injury. Thus, in an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff may recover damages not only for his unlawful arrest and imprisonment and for the expenses of his defence, but also for the injury caused to his good fame and character by reason of the false accusation; and, in consequence, a subsequent suit for the latter will be barred.(4)

An act sometimes consists of a series, and so may an act constituting a tort. The various acts may thus constitute a single wrong, so as to furnish but a single cause of action. As a general rule, acts of a similar character, performed in pursuance of the same general purpose, constitute one act and one tort, particularly so if the acts are done at the same time, or in actual continuation.(5) So a libel constitutes a single cause of action, even though it consists of several statements in the libellous pamphlet. A litigant cannot select one portion of a libel as the ground for one action, and another as the ground for a second, and so on.(6)

Generally, where goods are wrongfully detained after seizure, the deten-

The question of combination or absence of concert affecting or not the unity of the cause of action, has been considered with reference to misjoinder in the following cases:—Gujadhur Pershad v. Saheb Roy, 19 W. tion does not constitute a separate cause of action, but is only the consequence of the seizure. So, after a suit for recovery of property, a suit for damages for wrongful detention of the same property is barred.(1) In such cases there is one cause of action, for which damages must be assessed once for all, and different remedies. The same principle has in some cases been applied to suits for mesne profits of land from which the owner is dispossessed; (2) and a suit for possession of land has been held a bar to a suit for mesne profits of that land.(3) It has, however, in other cases been held to the contrary, both on account of sect. 10 of the Code of 1859,(4) and sect. 44 of the last Code, corresponding with O. II. rr. 4, 5 of this,(5) that claims to recover possession of immoveable property and for mesne profits are distinct claims; (6) and, conversely, a suit for mesne profits of land has been held not to bar a suit for its possession, the fact of the priority of the suit for mesne profits being immaterial so far as the construction of the Code is concerned.(7) These cases proceed on the principle that the right to possess immoveable property and the right to enjoy the profits of such property are distinct causes of action. The causes of action in a suit to recover possession under sect. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and in a suit to recover mesne profits, are not the same, in that in the first case the party is entitled to recover possession though he had no title, whereas, if he were a trespasser, mesne profits would not be given against the true owner.(8) But where a suit was brought for possession of mortgaged property and a deposit was made in Court, a second suit to recover mesne profits from the date of deposit to that of recovery of possession was held barred.(1)

As to whether or not there is a new cause of action in the case of continuing torts; the general rule appears to be that in the case of such torts as are not of a necessarily injurious and permanent character, there is a continuing obligation to abate them, and the continuance of the nuisance is held to be a new tort and therefore a separate cause of action; but the rule is otherwise in the case of all torts of a permanent character which continue to operate injuriously without any external agency.(2) While if there are different persons injured there are different torts, the question as to the number of causes of action which the same person may have, turns upon the number of torts and not upon the number of different pieces of property which may have been injured. Thus an act which damages two properties belonging to the same man at the same time and by the same means does not create two causes of action. The elements of damage are multifarious but the cause of it is a unit; but it will be otherwise if the cause itself is not single and indivisible.(3) A suit for certain moneys said to have been misappropriated by the defendant while acting as manager of a joint family, was held to bar a subsequent suit for the plaintiff's share of certain joint paddy held by the defendant at the time of the first suit, Mitter, J., observing: "The causes of action in both the cases originated in the refusal of the defendant to give to the plaintiffs their share of the properties realized by him as manager . . . the manager of a joint Hindu family holds possession of various items of property on behalf of the family. Can it be contended for a moment that each member of the family has a separate cause of action for his share in each item of those properties?" (4)

An act which causes injury both to person and property may constitute different torts. Both causes of action may be founded upon one act, but they are not on that account identical causes of action.(5) All the claims in respect of the tort which is the cause of action should be made in one suit.(1)

Contract.—Each separate contract made with the same or different persons constitutes a separate cause of action. So the holder of two independent mortgages over the same property may sue and obtain a decree for sale on each of them separately:(2) and two bonds have been held to constitute separate causes of action, even though the circumstances out of which they sprung might themselves at the time have constituted a cause of action.(3) Each of several contracts made with separate persons, though made at one and the same time, is a distinct and separate cause of action.(4) Thus in the second of the last-mentioned cases an engagement for payment of rent with each tenant was held to be a separate cause of action; as also in the second each purchase of goods made by several persons. A bond executed by father and son living together, joint in all their concerns, constitutes a separate cause of action from that executed by the son alone, as the father could not be responsible for the latter.(5) Where there are separate contracts the breach of each constitutes a separate cause of action.(6) Where there is a single contract, and several breaches which have occurred before any suit is brought, all the breaches must be included in one action even though the claim may be in part for a debt and in part for damages.(7) In Bikrama Singh v. Prab Dial,(8) Plowden, J., said: "Where there is an obligation created by a single contract, and several breaches have occurred before action brought, a plaintiff who does not claim all that he is entitled to in respect of such breaches does truly split his claim. The illustration seems to regard the obligation and the several breaches before suit as constituting but one cause of action. before action brought. Similarly a plaintiff excluded by a defendant for a definite period from enjoyment of profits of his property, would probably be bound to claim all the mesne profits which he was entitled to recover up to date of suit in respect of exclusion for such period." The Explanation is now amended so as to expressly include successive claims arising under the same obligation.

Claims under the same contract for several instalments of the same rent, or for several instalments of the same negotiable instrument, have been frequently held to be claims for the same cause of action.(1) Though a party may sue in respect of each instalment of rent,(2) or of a debt (3) as it falls due, the aggregate of two or more of such unpaid instalments cannot be divided into two or more causes of action but is deemed for the purpose of this section one cause of action. Whatever instalments are due must be sued for.(4) There is no distinction between a suit omitting to claim an earlier rent, and a suit omitting to claim a later rent which is due at the date of its institution.(5) The same principle applies to all interest due at the time of suit, though a suit for interest which may accrue due after the former suit will not be barred.(6) Similarly, though, where there are more covenants than one in a contract which are to be performed at different times, the breach of each constitutes a single and independent cause of action on which a separate suit may be brought, when a suit is brought on any contract after there has been a breach of several covenants, the breach of them all is considered a single cause of action.(7) So, also, in the case of continuing contracts for the doing of any act, though there is a separate covenant for the doing of that act at every moment during the period of the contract, and a breach at every moment the contract is or remains unfulfilled, the entire breach at the time of any suit is deemed a single cause of action.(8) Contracts for service

The principle is, however, not applicable when the covenants are so different in their nature as to be considered separate contracts, in which case the breach of each covenant will be a separate cause of action, ib., 542. And if performance of several covenants is secured differently, their breach will not constitute a single cause of action: Yashvant v. Vithal, 21 B. 267 (1895).

for a term are entire contracts. The breach of such a contract constitutes a single cause of action, and a claim for damages for the breach may be made only once.(1) If several items which make up a claim are of the same nature, and form part of the same course of dealing so as to pass under the same description, and form part of one transaction, they must be considered as one cause of action and must be joined in one suit, though they may have arisen out of several contracts.(2) Where, however, the contract expressly provides that each monthly demand is to be deemed or treated as a separate contract, the plaintiff is entitled to bring separate suits for damages.(3) Where several articles are sold in succession by A to B, if the vendor sues for the price, he must sue for the price of all the goods sold up to the date of his suit, and cannot sue separately first for one and then for another.(4) The principle of such cases is that the transaction really constitutes one demand. On the same principle, a running account generally constitutes one demand and one cause of action, as also wages for work done under a general hiring.(5) All damages claimed in respect of the cause of action and accrued at date of suit must be sued for in one action; (6) as also all claims and relief arising thereout.(7)

The scope of the identity of the cause of action has been considerably extended by the addition of the Explanation of the rule, which supersedes those cases in which it was held that a suit on a collateral security given for a debt would not bar a suit for the debt itself. This is generally not the case now, and, conversely, a suit for a bill will bar a suit to enforce a security given in respect of it.(8) As regards, however, mortgages of immoveable property, the rule must now be read in subordination to sect. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. But that Act does not nullify the rule entirely, and does not remove both the restriction on the splitting of claims and the splitting of remedies. Its only purpose is to relieve a mortgagee from the restriction placed on the splitting of his remedies.(1) It has been held (2) that a mortgagee taking out a money decree was not bound to bring one suit for the whole of the property belonging to his judgment-debtor if it had passed to different parties under different title-deeds, but might follow the property upon which he had a lien into the hands first of one purchaser and then of another; which would appear also to be law now in the case of suits under sect. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. Where a mortgagee holds two mortgages on the same property executed by the same person, he cannot maintain a suit to recover the sum due on the later mortgage only, by sale of the property subject to the prior mortgage.(3) It has been held that where a mortgagee wishes to make out a case that he is entitled to a decree against the mortgagor personally or against his unhypothecated property in the event of the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property being insufficient to pay the mortgage-debt, he is bound to put forward in his plaint the allegations which, if established, would entitle him to that relief.(4)

Miscellaneous.—As regards mortgages, in the following cases the cause of action in the two suits was held not to be the same :—

Suit by mortgagee against mortgagor to declare mortgage lien; suit against attaching creditors of mortgagors to declare lien over surplus moneys, proceeds of sale by Collector of portion of mortgaged properties.(5) Suit by purchaser of equity of redemption of share for recovery thereof on redemption of whole; suit after purchase of remainder of mortgagor's interest for possession thereof.(6) A suit on a second mortgage is no bar to a suit on the first.(7) Suit for overdue interest on mortgage held not to bar subsequent suit to secure principal and interest by sale, there being two separate contracts contained in same instrument and distinct covenants secured in a different manner.(8) Suit by obligee against obligor to enforce lien; suit by former against purchaser in execution of money decree to have it declared that property was liable to be sold under obligee's money decree would not necessarily extinguish the creditor's lien: Momtazoodeen v. Rajcoomar, 14 B. L. R. 408 (1875); Jonmenjoy Mullick v. Dossmoney Dossee, 7 C. 714 (1881); but under the Code of 1877, and prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act (vide post), it was held that a separate suit for enforcing the lien was barred: Gumani v. Ram Padarath, 2 A. 838 (1880).

on an alleged mortgage which was dismissed, is no bar to subsequent suit on another mortgage of the same property.(1) A suit brought by a wife during the life of her husband for the recovery of the prompt portion of her dower will be no bar to a subsequent suit for the recovery of the deferred portion.(2)

In the following cases the cause of action was held to be the same:— Where an occupancy tenant made a mortgage with possession of his holding, a suit by the proprietor for the cancellation of the mortgage was held to bar a suit for the possession of the holding; as the cause of action in the two suits would be the same, the defendants taking possession under his mortgage not affording a second and distinct cause of action from the execution of the deed itself.(3) A suit to redeem a mortgage on the ground of the mortgagee having received more than the amount due in respect of mortgage bars a subsequent suit for the amount of the surplus received by him.(4) Suit for redemption of kanam: subsequent suit based on admissions known to the plaintiff at time of previous suit that defendants were kanamdars under plaintiff's predecessor in title.(5) Suit for possession of a portion of a house alleged to have been partitioned in proceedings before a Court of Revenue; subsequent suit for partition of the same house in a Civil Court.(6) As to specific performance, see below.(7)

The general rule is that every partition shall embrace all the joint property, but it is subject to certain exceptions—such as (a) where different portions of it are situated in and out of British India; (b) where a portion of it is not immediately available for partition, by reason of (i) its being in possession of mortgagees, or (ii) because it was inam land, which required Government permission to give jurisdiction to the Court: (c) where property is held in partnership by the joint family along with strangers, who have no interest in the family partition among the sharers, and who could not therefore be made parties in the family partition suit.(8) The section was held not to apply where the title on which the former suit was based was exclusive ownership, while that on which the subsequent suit was based was joint ownership.(1)

The karnavan of a Malabar tarwad is not barred from bringing successive suits for land in possession of an anandravan, the cause of action being the right to demand restoration of tarwad property at any time, and it being in the discretion of the karnavan to leave any item of property he pleases in the possession of anandravans.(2)

"Shall not afterwards sue."- The bar is not avoided by an expression of intention to sue again.(3) A plaintiff may, however, obtain leave to omit to sue in respect of one of several remedies. A suit, however, which is withdrawn with permission to sue again does not create any bar, as the effect of such permission is to leave matters in the position in which they would have stood if no such suit had been instituted.(4) The same principle was held to apply even when the suit was dismissed for non-appearances of parties under sect. 140 of the N.W.P. Act, 1881, with leave specially reserved to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit; the reason assigned for the decision being that before the case was struck off the plaintiff could have so amended his plaint as to have included the claim in the first suit; and à fortiori there was no reason why he should not include it in the subsequent suit.(5)

The bar affects the plaintiff in the second suit if he was plaintiff in the first, and those who claim under him; (6) and it is not avoided by the plaintiff having been a minor at the time of the former suit.(7) The rule says, "shall not afterwards sue." It does not therefore apply where the suits are simultaneous and not successive.(8) In the case cited below,(9) the Madras High Court held that of the two simultaneous suits, both would of course not be barred, and the decree in either might stand, provided the decree in the other was reversed; and option was given to the plaintiff to choose which would stand, the other being dismissed. Fractions of a day are, however, recognized, and where two suits are presented on the same day it must be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that the suits were presented and admitted in the order in which their numbers appear in the register.(1) The rule only bars a subsequent suit. It therefore does not preclude a landlord from adopting any other remedy the law gives him to enable him to recover his rent, as, for instance, by distraint under the Rent Recovery Act.(2)

"In respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished."—The Privy Council observed that the right which a litigant possesses without knowing, or ever having known, that he possesses it can hardly be regarded as a "portion of his claim" within the meaning of the section.(3) It has been said that a plaintiff must be taken to have abandoned or relinquished his claim on a real cause of action if he brings it in a false one.(4) But this statement has been adversely criticized,(5) there being nothing in r. 2 to warrant the inference that all causes of action ought to be included in the alternative or otherwise, and if it were correct it would make no difference whether the cause of action is false in the sense that the facts alleged as constituting it are false, or it is false in the sense that the facts alleged do not in law constitute a cause of action.

"More than one relief."—The present rule, unlike that of the Code of 1859, refers, as has been already pointed out, both to the splitting of remedies or reliefs as well as the splitting of claims.(6) Both the claim and the remedy have reference to the cause of action litigated in the previous suit.(7) There is no bar where the remedy sought in the subsequent suit is in respect of a cause of action different from that which formed the basis of the relief in the former suit.(8) Further, the bar in regard to the remedy is applicable only where the plaintiff was at the time of the former suit entitled to more than one remedy; and where the plaintiffs were entitled to only one remedy in the former suit the provisions of the section are not applicable to the second suit; (9) nor where a plaintiff's suit for a remedy has been dismissed on the ground that he is not entitled to it but to another remedy, for which he

In a similar case in the Madras High Court a contrary view was taken on the ground that the right to possession and conveyance arise coincidently, and suit for possession was not a separate cause of action: Narayana v. Kandasami, 22 M. 24 (1898). The principle, however, in the text was applied in Amlu v. Ketlilamma, 14 M. 23 (1890).

subsequently sues.(1) In a case in the Punjab Chief Court,(2) Burney, J., observed that what the plaintiff "asked for in the former suit was not a remedy to which he was entitled, and was, therefore, not one of the other alternative remedies between which the plaintiff could have chosen;" and in a subsequent case (3) in the same Court, Tremlett, J., observed, that "if the defendant's contentions were sound, we should have to hold that the construction of sect. 43 (now r. 2) is that a plaintiff entitled to only one remedy on his cause of action, who by mistake sues for what the Court considers is not the remedy to which he is entitled, will be precluded from subsequently suing for the proper one;" and, "put in this form, it is clear that the language of the section countenances no such proposition."

The rule applies to the case where there being identity of causes of action in the two suits, the plaintiff was entitled in the first suit to more than one remedy,(4) either cumulatively or alternatively. If without the leave of the Court he omit to sue for any of such remedies he cannot do so afterwards. So a personal decree for maintenance and a declaration that it is a charge on family property are two remedies referable to the same cause of action, viz. the right to receive maintenance, and therefore two separate suits cannot be brought in respect of the two remedies against the same defendant.(5)

It is not very easy to define what constitutes "a claim" as distinguished from a "remedy," for the former appears to include the latter to some extent. Doubtless the two terms were intended to overlap. While a claim has been defined as a demand of right, a remedy has been said to be the legal means to recover a right.(6) It has also been broadly defined to denote the decree or decretal order with its proper legal results, which is the successful suitor's warrant for obtaining the relief he has achieved by his suit.(7) Mortgage cases are common instances in which there is more than one remedy. Where a person asks for relief and ancillary thereto for an injunction, there is more than one remedy. In many cases there is an option of suing on the contract, or for breach of the contract, and in these cases there is more than one remedy, but the remedies are alternative.(8) In some cases the two terms "claim" and "remedy" are used indiscriminately. So it has been held that a suit for specific performance bars a subsequent suit for damages for failure to perform, as both claims arise out of the same cause of action, namely, the breach of contract.(1) And where a plaintiff was entitled both to recover rent and to forfeiture for non-payment he was held barred after suing for the rent from suing to enforce a forfeiture for non-payment of the same rent, as both the claims arose out of the same cause of action, namely, the non-payment of rent.(2) Similarly, a suit for an injunction against a defendant directing him to abstain from excluding the plaintiff and preventing him from using his house has been held to be a bar to a suit for damages for the exclusion from the house.(3) The amendment now substitutes the word "relief" for "remedy."

Upon the question formerly discussed, whether in execution of a simple money decree, only the rights of the debtor pass and the mortgagor retains his lien, see below.(4) Sect. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act restrained a mortgagee from selling the mortgaged premises, except under a decree for sale.(5) Under the Code of 1859 a declaratory decree might be sued for and obtained, and a subsequent suit brought for the consequential relief.(6) But see now sect. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, which virtually repeals sect. 15 of the Code of 1859. Under the special provisions of the amended Dekkan Agriculturists Act excluding the operation of this section, a suit by a mortgagor for account does not bar a subsequent suit for redemption,(7) though prior to the amendment of this Act the contrary was held upon the principle enacted by this section.(8) If mesne profits are not asked for in a suit for specific performance of a contract to reconvey a plot of land, a subsequent suit for them will be barred by this rule.(9)

Leave to omit relief.—The words in the last Code were "obtained before the first hearing." It was, however, held that leave might be applied for and obtained when the case was called on for first hearing and before anything had been done towards the hearing of the case.(10) Though these words have been omitted probably the same rule will hold now. Such leave should be obtained from the Court before which the original suit was pending.(11) same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit.

(2) Where causes of action are united, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit shall depend on the amount or value of the aggregate subject-matters at the date of instituting the suit.

Origin and scope of rules relating to joinder of causes of action.— The first paragraph of r. 3, which corresponds with sect. 8, Act VIII. of 1859, is taken from the English O. 18, r. 1, which, though it does not contain any reference to the case of more than one defendant, has been construed as if it referred to the "same defendants" also; it having been held (1) that "to bring into one claim distinct causes of action against different persons, neither of them having anything to do with the other (and only historically connected as one matter in the transaction), is not contemplated by O. 18, r. 1, which authorizes the joinder, not of several actions against distinct persons, but of several causes of action." It was, however, pointed out that the provisions contained in several of the English rules had been omitted from the Code, and the inference therefore was that it was not intended to introduce into this country the wide scope now afforded to suits in the English Courts; and that r. 3 is different from the much more general language of the English r. 1 and r. 6, which provide that claims by plaintiffs jointly may be joined with claims by them or any of them separately, and were diametrically opposed to the prohibition of sect. 31 of the last Code, that plaintiffs might not join in respect of distinct causes of action.(2) The rule is based on considerations of convenience, the misjoinder contemplated leading to complication and difficulty of dealing with the case of each defendant separately, and being vexatious and harassing to the defendants.(3)

Objections (as to which see O. I. r. 13) on the ground of misjoinder are favourite ones in this country. There may be misjoinder of plaintiffs or misjoinder of defendants. This matter is dealt with in the preceding Order. The rules under discussion relate only to joinder of causes of action. They assume that the action has been rightly constituted under the provisions relating to the joinder of parties.(4) Then there is misjoinder of subjects of suit, which is sometimes called multifariousness, though the term is not used in the Code. Multifariousness, however, properly so called, exists when one of the defendants is not interested in the whole of the relief sought.(1) This is prohibited by the first clause of r. 3, where the parties have distinct and separate interests.(2) Misjoinder of subjects of suit is where two subjects distinct in their nature are united in one suit, and, for convenience sake, the Court requires them to be separated. Whether the various subjects shall be dealt with together is a matter of discretion to be determined upon considerations of convenience with regard to the circumstances of each particular case.(3) This matter is dealt with in r. 6. In other words, while multifariousness strictly so called is, in cases coming within the terms of the first paragraph of r. 3, absolutely prohibited, an alleged misjoinder of subjects, as it was formerly called, not amounting to multifariousness in the former sense, is left to be dealt with according to the discretion of the Court. R. 3 applies to cases where there are only one plaintiff, one defendant and several causes of action, and to cases where the plaintiffs or defendants, though consisting of two or more individuals, may be considered as an unit with reference to all the different causes of action. Where there is more than one plaintiff or defendant, the test is—is there community of interest in the issues to be determined? in other words, joint interest in the questions raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action.(4) The question of absence of cause of action and misjoinder must be distinguished. It may be, for instance, that certain defendants can substantiate pleas which, as a matter of substantive law or on the merits, would absolve them from liability. But this circumstance has no effect upon the question of misjoinder, which is purely a matter of adjective law or procedure.(5) While, as already stated, the rule enacted in r. 3 is based on substantial grounds of convenience, it must also be remembered that the policy of the law is not to favour multiplication of suits; (6) and it is exceedingly undesirable that any suit should fail on account of any such technical objection,(7) unless it has been taken, and is thoroughly well founded.

Mahmood, J., was, however, of opinion (at p. 178) that the Code did not prescribe a narrower rule upon the particular point then under discussion. In Muthappa v. Muthu, 27 M. 80, 83 (1903), it was also said that the terms of the English rule were wider and more general than the terms of the Code. But this case has not been followed: Aiyathurai v. Santhu Meera, 31 M. 252 (1908). See now O. I. r. 9, ante.

It was held that the provisions of sect. 45 of the last Code did not apply to suits for arrears of rent under the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, so as to admit of a joint suit being brought in respect of arrears of rent due in respect of several holdings.(1)

Summary of rules on this matter.—A summary of the rules which deal with the joinder of parties, shows that any number of plaintiffs may join in respect of relief claimed arising out of the "same act or transaction;" that they may not join in respect of distinct causes of action in cases not within O. I. r. 1, ante; that any number of defendants may be joined where relief is sought against them under O. I. r. 3, or in respect of any one contract under O. I. r. 6; that no suit shall fail for mere misjoinder; and that except where plaintiffs have joined in respect of distinct causes of action as above stated, the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy as far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it.(2) Putting it shortly, the rules provide that a suit shall include the whole claim; that any plaintiff or plaintiffs having several causes of action, in which they are jointly interested against one defendant or several defendants jointly, may unite them in the same suit, but unless such causes of action are of the kind mentioned in clauses (a), (b) or (c) of r. 4 of this Order, they may not be joined, without leave of the Court, with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property; that where a plaintiff or plaintiffs have united in the same suit several causes of action against a defendant or defendants, the Court of its own motion, or on the application of the defendants, or upon agreement of the parties, may order separate trials, or confine the scope of the suit, or exclude causes of action and direct amendment of the plaint, where by the joinder of several causes of action inconvenience and confusion are likely to be caused.(3) As to whether sect. 45 of the last Code was a restrictive proviso to sect. 28 of that Code, see post.

"May unite."—It is a pre-requisite of the right to join in one suit more than one cause of action against a defendant that the Court to which the plaint is presented should have jurisdiction over all the causes of action.(4) In the case cited, it was observed that "unless the plaintiff could lawfully unite them, the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction over either," and that "he should have returned the plaint, although, without amendment, it could not have been presented in either Court which had jurisdiction over either cause of action." It is, however, proper to unite several causes of action in a suit when the title to all the property to which the defence relates is the same, though the lands claimed may not be in one district.(1) For recent applications of the provision, see cases cited.(2)

Was sect. 45 of last Code a restrictive proviso to sect. 28 of that Code? The effect in this respect of the amendments.—There was force in the argument which answered this question in the negative, though the contrary was held under the last Code by the majority of the Full Bench (3) in which it was raised. Chapter III. of that Code dealt with the parties to a suit, and Chapter IV. of the same Code with the frame of a suit. The former assumed the existence of an ascertained subject-matter in dispute, and from that point of view laid down rules as to the persons who might be made parties to the suit. Chapter IV. assumed the existence of ascertained parties, and dealt with the subject-matter of the suit. The two modes of dealing did not clash with one another. Where there was identity of subject-matter the rules governing the case were to be found in Chapter III.; where there was identity of parties the scope of the action was to be limited by the rules in Chapter IV. The two Chapters thus regarded an action from two different points of view, and the rules contained in one could not, in this aspect of the case, be regarded as provisos to the rules contained in the other. By sect. 26 of the last Code all plaintiffs might join in respect of the same "cause of action." By sect. 28 all defendants might be joined against whom the right to any relief in respect of "the same matter," whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, was alleged to exist. The term "matter" in sect. 28 of that Code was not convertible with "cause of action," but was more comprehensive—a conclusion which received support not only from the circumstance that the two expressions were used in contiguous sections (26, 27, 28) of the same Chapter, and could therefore scarcely be construed to have the same meaning, but also from the fact that the last part of sect. 31, which prohibited plaintiffs joining in respect of distinct "causes of action," was meant to be a limitation of the latitude allowed by Chapter III. as to the joinder of parties in respect of the "same matter." So long, then, as the matter in dispute was identical the plaintiff was entitled to bring before the Court all persons whose presence was necessary to afford him full relief in respect of that matter. Sect. 45 was not applicable to cases in which the subject-matter of the suit was the same, but related to cases in which the causes of action were entirely distinct. Sect. 28, on the other hand, related to cases in which the subject-matter was one and the same, and sect. 45 was not a restrictive proviso to sect. 28, for the effect of such a view would be to nullify an important part of the latter section. The essence of the provisions of sect. 45 was that there should be joint rights in the plaintiffs and joint liability of the defendants; whilst sect. 28 contemplated the granting of relief against the defendants not only jointly and in the alternative, but also severally, and it could not be conceived how this could be done in a case in which the liability of the defendants was joint, as required by sect. 45. The latter section did not limit the operation of sect. 28, nor did sect. 28 extend the scope of sect. 45. Sect. 28 laid down a rule which was distinct from and independent of the rule embodied in sect. 45.(1)

According to this view of the two sections, a suit might have been brought against several defendants against whom the right to any relief in respect of "the same matter" existed, and also a suit uniting several distinct causes of action against several defendants jointly.

The majority, however, of the Full Bench held that it was difficult to interpret the expression "same matter" in sect. 28 as meaning more than the same "cause of action"; and that Chapter III. must necessarily be read with and controlled by the subsequent provisions of Chapter IV. If, then, sect. 28 and sect. 45 were read together, the joint, several, or alternative liability of defendants mentioned in sect. 28 meant such a liability in respect of one or several causes of action, which cause or causes of action were united in the same suit against the same defendants jointly; in other words, while the cause or causes of action had to be joint as to all the defendants, the relief asked might be joint, several, or in the alternative.(2) It might, it was said, be that the term "same matter" was more comprehensive than "cause of action," and that if sect. 28 stood by itself, it would in effect allow a joinder prohibited by sect. 45. But if, as was held, that section did not affect, but was, on the contrary, controlled by sects. 44 and 45, which regulated the joinder of different causes of action, then sect. 28 was restricted in its application to cases in which different causes of action might be joined in one suit. In this view, sect. 28 did not affect the question of joinder of causes of action, which was entirely regulated by the provisions of Chapter IV., and a suit, though not bad for misjoinder of parties under sect. 28, might be bad for misjoinder of causes of action under sect. 45. It was not clear, however, why the two different expressions should have been used, and neither of the views stated was free from difficulty.(3)

The case of several liability is retained in O. I. r. 3, corresponding with sect. 28 of that Code. But the words "in respect of the same matter" have been now omitted from O. I. r. 3. For the reasons given by him, the opinion of Mahmood, J., would still seem preferable even had this not been so. The position would now appear to be this: O. I. r. 1 allows plaintiffs to join where the relief claimed (whether the claim be joint or several) is in respect of or arises out of "the same act or transaction." The necessary corollary of this is that if all persons may be joined as defendants against whom relief is claimed in respect of "the same matter" this phrase must include what is understood by "the same act or transaction" in O. I. r. 1, that is, cases where, though the cause of action may not be the same, relief is claimed on a common ground. The qualification is now omitted, but the same result would follow even if O. I. r. 3 had not been (as is the case) expressly amended to bring it into conformity with the provisions of r. 1 of that Order. But where the subject-matter of the suit is not the same as regards plaintiffs and defendants, and the causes of action are entirely distinct, there being no common ground, then under r. 3, in order to justify joinder, there must be joint rights in the plaintiffs and joint liability in the defendants.

(3) It has also been held in a recent Madras case that the words "same matter" are wider than the term "cause of action:" Dampanaboyina v. Addala, 25 M. 736, at pp. 745, 746 (1902). The Calcutta High Court has in some cases justified the joinder of defendants on the ground that there was but one cause of action: Loke Nath v. Keshab Ram, 13 C. 147, 152 (1886); Ishan Chandra v. Rameshwar, 24 C. 831 (1897); though it has never held that the two terms are synonymous. See also Luckumsey v. Fazulla, 5 B. 177, at p. 179 (1880); Janokinath v. Ramrunjun, 4 C. at pp. 952, 953 (1879); Muthappa v. Muthu, 27 M. 80, at p. 83 (1903).

Cause of action.—As already elsewhere observed, this expression has always had a signification which cannot be said to be precise or definite,(1) being sometimes taken to mean the right, together with the infringement, or the title together with the injury; in order words, all the circumstances which a plaintiff is required to allege in order to show a right to relief; and being sometimes used as indicating merely the injury, which is the cause of the plaintiff coming into Court.(2) or as indicating the plaintiff's right merely.(3) These differing definitions account in part for the differing views to be found in the cases under this as other sections.(4) So the right has been treated as the whole cause of action.(5) On the other hand, it was held that the term as used in sect. 31 of the last Code, and in the section corresponding with r. 3, had the same sense as in English law, viz. of every fact which it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove to support his right to the judgment of the Court.(6) The title on which a plaintiff sues is only one of several ingredients in the cause of action, and that term includes also the infringement of the plaintiff's right.(7) The question under the section, which r. 3 replaces, has often arisen in cases of alienations of joint property by a coparcener, or of a Hindu widow's estate by the widow, and sometimes in other cases. The cases upon the point are in conflict, and it is not possible to reconcile them. The determination of the question whether there is a misjoinder in respect of cause of action, where one suit is brought against all the alienees, depends upon the view which is adopted of the meaning of the term "cause of action," and also on the question discussed in the last paragraph.

(1) In Fatima Bibi v. Abdul Majid, 14 A. at p. 536 (1892), it was said that the term "cause of action" had not been used in ss. 43, 44, 45, 46, and 47 of the Code of 1882, in precisely the same sense.

R. 86, 87 (1871), the Court said, "It is not a plaintiff's title which is to be regarded in a suit of this nature in considering a plea of misjoinder, but rather the wrongs alleged," and pointed out that if those wrongs were distinct and separable the wrong done must, in the absence of combination, be tried separately. See Mohan Lalji v. Gordhan Lalji Maharaj, 35 A. 283 (P. C.) (1913), proof of title by Shebait.

In some cases, the decision in favour of the unity of the cause of action proceeds upon the theory that the plaintiff's right is the cause of action.(1) If this be so, and there be unity as to the right, there is no misjoinder of causes of action in a suit in which the several alienees are defendants.(2) Apart from the question as to the correctness or otherwise of this view, practical objections have been urged against joinder in such cases. It has been said that one alienee is not interested in an alienation of another part of the estate made at another time to another person. Evidence against one defendant may not be admissible against another. Different questions may arise as to mesne profits. The procedure may prove vexatious and harassing to the defendants, each of whom has to wait whilst the case is going on against others, and to detain his witnesses meanwhile. The case is complicated in both the Court of first instance and appeal, where each case may have to be argued as a separate and distinct cause.(3) Even where the action was held sustainable, the Court observed that separate actions against the alienees was the better procedure.(4) As against this, it

In this case, which was a suit brought against the alienees of the plaintiff's father's widows to recover the properties which had been alienated by the widows during his minority, Holloway, Ag. C.J., said: "The Judge says that the cause of action against each of the purchasers is a distinct one. The plaintiff claims his share of family property. His cause of action, the right, is his relation to the family to which the property appertains, and on this right, if established, and if he is not otherwise barred from recovering, he will be entitled to that share wherever found. The fact that various persons during his minority have affected to purchase parcels of the property does not destroy the unity of his ground of action." And in a suit by reversioners of B against defendants, who set up respective titles to different plots of land by purchase from B, it was also held there was no misjoinder, the Court holding that the cause of action was that plaintiffs were reversioners of B: Ishan Chunder v. Rameswar 24 C. 831 (1897), diss. from in Ram Prosad v. Sachi Dassi, 6 C. In Mahomed v. Krishnan, 11 M. 106 (1886), a suit by junior members of a tarwad against the karnavan and others, including persons to whom he had alienated tarwad property, the Court observed (at p. 111) that it made no difference whether the right enforced was that of a coparcener or reversioner, and that in the view that the primary ground of action is the interest vested in possession as regards the whole of the property in suit there is unity of title, and the claim made is one in respect of the same cause of action. may be said that the policy of the law is not to favour multiplication of suits.(1) And in some cases, as observed by the Madras High Court,(2) "it is manifest that the number and nature of the alienations are no unimportant elements for the determination of their propriety. It is most desirable that the whole of them should be at once before the Court called upon to decide the question, in order to secure the soundness of the particular decisions, and perhaps the avoidance of discordant decisions in different cases upon facts nearly the same." It would probably be best if the Courts were given, as to procedure, a discretion to be exercised in a manner to the convenience of trial and of the parties and to the advantage of substantial justice. It is, however, necessary to determine the question by reference to the definition of the term under discussion and the other provisions of the Code. If therefore, on the other hand, the words "cause of action" denote both the right and its infringement,(3) there has been said to be distinct causes of action against each of the alienees, and in consequence misjoinder,(4) except perhaps where the suit is both against the alienor and the alienees. In such case it has been said (5) that (there being a complete cause of action both as to right and infringement) against the defendant alienor, it is necessary to bring the alienees on the record to afford ground for decision of the whole dispute, and that it cannot be said that a separate cause of action exists against the alienor "in conjunction with each group of alienees, the alienations not being the causes of the present action,(6) but merely incidental thereto." (7) In a case, however, where the alienor was a party, the Bombay High Court held that the plaintiffs had distinct causes of action against the several defendants, and that there was a misjoinder.(8) Whether, however, the suit is open to objection for misjoinder or not, the Court may always in its discretion direct separate trials to be held. Similarly, in a suit for possession of immoveable property against two defendants, the cause of action being that the first defendant had no title to mortgage the property to the second defendant, it was held that there was no misjoinder, and that there were not two causes of action, but one, namely, the infringement of the plaintiff's right by the first defendant, out of which flowed the title asserted by the second defendant, who derived title from the first defendant, and whose case stood or fell with his.(1) A fortiori, there is but one cause of action against a defendant and others who are not real but merely ostensible purchasers from him.(2) So, again, a defendant who, under a decree, subsequently reversed, ousts a plaintiff from possession, may be sued with persons to whom, subsequent to the ouster, he has leased the land; they stood in the shoes of their lessor, and were jointly liable with him to be ousted.(3) The joinder of several persons in doing an act does not affect its unity or the unity of the cause of action constituted by that act, as in the case of an obstruction or ouster by a number of persons who are alleged to have acted in combination.(4) It was held that different causes of action could not be joined in one suit against different parties, where each had a distinct and separate interest; (5) that the Courts should reject plaints against several defendants for causes of action which had accrued against each of them separately and in respect of which they are not jointly concerned; (6) that there was no section of the Code which permitted a person to sue various defendants together in respect of various causes of action; (7) and that plaintiffs could not join in one suit in respect of causes of action in which they were not all jointly interested.(8)

The following suits have thus been held to be bad for misjoinder:—A joint action for the price of timber against defendants, who purchased each one pair of timber separately from the other; (1) A sold to X and B sold to X; a suit by Y against A, B, and X to enforce a right of pre-emption; (2) a suit claiming possession against all of defendants, with mesne profits against some and damages against others; (3) a suit by a talookdar against the zamindar and several purchasers to set aside sales to them respectively of five patni taluks sold for arrears of rent due separately upon each; (4) a claim to set aside sale against auction purchaser and for damages against zurpeshgidars; (5) a suit against several persons, each a party to a distinct contract; (6) a suit as against one defendant for specific performance of a contract to sell land and as against another for a declaration that he was not entitled to any charge upon the same lands, the causes of action being distinct as against the defendants; (7) a suit against one person, an alleged agent of a firm, for breach of contract and against another as partner to have accounts taken and the partnership wound-up.(8)

It is necessary now, however, particularly in the case of suits by reversioners above mentioned, to consider the effect of the enlarged scope of O. I. r. 1 and its effect on the question of joinder of defendants, for now apparently all reversioners might join in any suit any number of defendants in respect of several properties, provided they base their claims (which need not be joint but may be several) on a common ground.

The relief.—The cause of action must, as in other cases, be distinguished from the relief claimed. So where plaintiff, a creditor, brought a suit on his own behalf and on behalf of other creditors, asking on his own behalf to set aside a deed as void, and on behalf of other creditors for a declaration that the deed was voidable, it was held that both the plaintiff and the other creditors had one cause of action, namely, the right to treat the deed as one which could not affect their rights, although as the plaintiff had obtained a decree which he wished to execute, he for that purpose required relief by setting aside the deed as void.(1)

A plaintiff may always put forward an alternative case,(2) provided that the facts stated as the basis of alternative relief are the same. Where there is a single cause of action, or several causes of action against the same defendant, no difficulty arises. Where the first defendant dispossessed the plaintiff of land sold to him by the second defendant, and he sued for possession and mesne profits, or in the alternative for the refund of the purchase-money from the second defendant, it was held that there was but one cause of action, namely, the dispossession and no misjoinder.(3) Two separate alternative causes of action against the same defendant may be joined.(4)

A claim for possession by plaintiffs, four anna zemindars, to receive a four anna share in a patni alleged to be in possession of all six defendants, or in the alternative, except as against one defendant, for rent, was held not to be bad for misjoinder, it being further held that notwithstanding that the claim for possession or rent might be unsustainable in fact as against some of the defendants, that was no ground for dismissing the suit generally for misjoinder.(5)

"Does sect. 45 (now rule 3) contemplate a case where plaintiff has really only one cause of action upon which he can succeed, but being in doubt as to which of his alleged causes of action will be successful proceeds upon both, with the intention of obtaining relief out of one of them? Are not the several causes of action contemplated by sect. 45 causes of action which, it is alleged, each afford grounds for separate relief, and combined for cumulative and not alternative relief?" (6) In England it has been held that if two persons could not be joined as defendants unless the causes of action against them were exactly the same, the object of the Legislature would be entirely defeated.(7) It would seem from the cases cited that the fact that alternative reliefs were claimed did not authorize a joinder of several causes of action against several persons not jointly interested. So where a suit was brought to set aside the sale of a mehal against the persons who had purchased it at an auction sale held for default in payment of Government revenue by zurpeshgidars, to whom the mehal had been let, or in the alternative for damages against the zurpeshgidars who had defaulted in the payment, it was dismissed for multifariousness as the two claims were based on distinct causes of action.(8) And where a plaintiff contracted for sale to him of a house for Rs.2500, and sued, alleging a subsequent sale by the defendant to a third party, and prayed for a decree either for specific performance of the contract of sale on payment of Rs.2400 (Rs.100 having been paid as earnest-money), or for pre-emption on the sale on payment of Rs.2500, or whatever might be the market value of the house, Chatterjee, J., observed, that two distinct claims in the alternative, based on distinct causes of action, could not be joined under the section corresponding with rule 3. Rivaz, J., also doubted the correctness of their joinder, putting the query already quoted.(1)

Same defendants jointly. -It has been already pointed out that joint interest in the main questions raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action against several defendants, the test being whether there is community of interest in the causes to be determined.(2) It was held that there was no provision of the Code allowing distinct causes of action against distinct sets of defendants, that is to say, causes of action in which the defendants are not all jointly interested, to be united in the same suit.(3) The mere similarity of the claim is no ground for joining in one suit claims which, though similar, are several and distinct against several persons; (4) nor is the convenience of their trial by one Court.(5) Where a cause of action arising out of a joint account of two defendants was united with another arising out of a transaction in which one of the defendants alone was concerned, it was held that the causes of action were not against the same defendants jointly.(6) Where the defendants are not jointly liable, each distinct cause of action must form the subject of a separate suit. So where A sold to X, and B sold to X, whereupon Y sued A, B, and X to enforce a right of pre-emption, it was held to be a misjoinder, there being distinct causes of action in respect of which the defendants had no common interest.(7) So where plaintiffs in a suit for partition joined as defendants a number of cultivating ryots, whom they sought to eject, it was held that the suit for partition was of little interest to the ryots, and the question of ejectment was a distinct one in the case of each ryot.(8) So, also, there has been held to be a misjoinder where the right to relief against one defendant was in respect of the non-fulfilment of a contract, and the right to a declaration against another was in respect of a threatened disturbance of the plaintiff's possession.(9) The same has been held in a suit against defendants for possession, and against some of them for damages, and against others for mesne profits; (10) and in a suit to recover possession of certain lands by reversal of certain deeds, some of the deeds being of absolute, and some of conditional, sale.(1) Although there must still be community of interest where the causes of action are entirely distinct, it will be necessary in each case to see whether this is so or whether though the causes of action are several there is a common ground justifying their joinder. On the other hand, there was held to be no misjoinder in a suit against a defendant who had obtained possession under a decree which had been reversed, as also against his lessees, the latter standing in the shoes of their lessor and being jointly liable with him to be ousted.(2) In a suit against joint decree-holders for the plaintiff's customary fourth share of the profits realized by the decree-holder by an execution sale of different houses at different times, the decree-holders were held to be joint, though their liability to give the share in respect of the sale of each house was separate.(3) So, also, a suit instituted to eject all the tenants holding separate lands in a village, and to recover arrears of rent from them, was held not to be bad for misjoinder, as all the defendants claimed by inheritance or by purchase or otherwise under one and the same person, or under one of two persons who had executed the muchalka for the lands, and the plaintiff therefore had a common cause of action against the defendants, and was not obliged to sue them separately.(4)

As in other cases,(5) a person who is a party in different capacities is not the same defendant—a principle which though partly recognized in rule 5 is of general application. Thus, where a person is a party in two capacities there is misjoinder, unless each cause of action affects him in both capacities.(6)

Plaintiffs jointly interested.—The words "jointly interested" were first introduced by Act XII. of 1879. Under the Code of 1859, it was held to be a misjoinder where the causes of action of the plaintiffs were different and distinct in their nature.(7) A suit brought by three persons for the possession

This case was distinguished in Haranund v. Prosunno, 9 C. 763 (1883) [suit by purchaser of property subsequently sold in execution against parties to the decree and purchasers in execution of different portions of property]; and in Ram Narain v. Annoda, 14 C. 681 [plaintiff talookdar obtained decree for ejectment of tenant. In execution of decree opposed by defendants. One suit against judgment-debtor and all parties opposing but without collusion]. In the first of these suits it was held there was no misjoinder, and in the second that there was. Both cases, however, based the decision upon the question whether the plaintiff had one object and the defendants a common defence. As regards these cases it was pointed out (Hukm Chand, C. P. C. 573), that the test for joinder was the unity of the cause of action and not of the object of the suit, and the unity of the defence was not knowable until after the institution of the suit.

And that negative fact of usage is, I think, influential to show how very unpracticable, quite apart from any matter of law, it has been found that combined suits of this character should be united together and treated as if they were one."

immoveable property, in which two of them claimed half the property under a title by inheritance, and the third claimed the other half in virtue of a sale thereof to him by the first plaintiff, was held to be bad for misjoinder of causes of action.(1) The Court said: "Although it appears to us that sect. 8 of Act VIII. of 1859, the first paragraph of sect. 45 of Act X. of 1877, and the first paragraph of the present Code mean the same thing, we assume that the Legislature by the amendment of 1877, by the amendment of 1879, and by the wording of the first paragraph of sect. 45, as it at present stands, intended to make it clear that their intention was that several plaintiffs could only join in suing several defendants in one suit for several causes of action when the plaintiffs were jointly interested in each and all of such causes of action, and that the second part of the first paragraph of sect. 45, is merely enacting that several plaintiffs jointly interested in the same causes of action against the same defendant or several defendants jointly may sue in the same manner, as by the first part of that paragraph it is enacted one plaintiff may sue one defendant or more jointly in one suit on several causes of action, to which the defendants, if more than one, were parties, and that it did not intend to confer a right by sect. 45 on several plaintiffs to sue, on causes of action which were not jointly vested in them, one or more defendants, although the acts of all the defendants jointly might have completed a separate cause of action of each several plaintiff and afforded him a cause of action on which he could sue alone." It was assumed, however, by the Judges that the Legislature did not intend "directly or indirectly to prohibit the joining by Hindu or Mahomedan heirs in one suit of their causes of action in respect of what had been the property of their ancestor or of the family;" and that it had been the practice in the North-West Provinces "to allow Hindu or Mahomedan heirs, even where their interests were several, to join in one suit for the recovery of property which had belonged to a common ancestor through whom title was claimed," and that they regarded the decision in Ram Sewak Singh v. Nakched.(2) as necessarily confined to the maintenance of that practice. The same principle was followed in a subsequent case,(3) in which it was held that several creditors, to each of whom separate debts were owing by the same debtor, could not jointly sue for the avoidance of a deed of gift executed by the debtor, which deed was alleged to have been made fraudulently with intent to defeat or delay executant's creditors, the cause of action of each separate creditor not being the same as that of the others. Similarly, a suit by two brothers for a declaration that the parts of the house attached in execution of a decree against their father belonged to them and not to him was held to be irregular, though the Court observed that the plaintiffs might well have thought that the case came within the latter part of the first paragraph, as in one sense their title was a common title, which was assailed by one and the same action of the execution creditor, and they were jointly interested in opposing the attachment and sale, although a sale would only have affected each man's separate interest.(1) Where the cause of action in the case of the first plaintiff aimed at the establishment of the title of the first plaintiff as issueless widow of M. G. to succeed him jointly with the other widows, whereas the cause of action in the case of second plaintiff aimed at the establishment of the title of second plaintiff by reason of an adoption to take the estate of M. G. to the exclusion of all others, it was held that it could not be said that the two plaintiffs were jointly interested in these inconsistent causes of action. The establishment of first plaintiff's title would exclude second plaintiff from all right to take or share in the estate, and the establishment of second plaintiff's title would equally debar first plaintiff from any share in the estate, but a right to be maintained out of it—a right which was not brought in contest (2) The Court added: "Sect. 45 permits of the joinder in the same suit of several causes of action in which several plaintiffs are jointly interested against the same defendant. These plaintiffs are jointly interested against the same defendant in the sense that it is the object of both plaintiffs to show a title in one or other of them to the whole or a portion of the estate in competition with the defendant; but this is not enough: they must each be jointly interested with the other in the several causes of action—not necessarily equally interested, but jointly interested; i.e. as we understand, not jointly interested as a mere matter of affection, but jointly interested as to the subject-matter of the suit which the causes of action have in contemplation." (3) When two persons are interested in a piece of land—one as melvaramdar, and the other kudivaramdar—and a third party commits a wrongful act which affects the rights of the persons so interested, it may be properly held that the land is common to both to the extent of entitling them to sue jointly in respect of the wrongful act, treating such act as giving rise to but one cause of action affecting the two persons more or less.(4) So long as several causes of action are by the same or jointly interested plaintiffs and against the same defendant or defendants jointly, they may be joined subject only to the Court's discretion of ordering their separation. There are no restrictions as to the nature of the cause of action which may be so joined, as it is stated (5) there are in most of the Code States of the American Union; but the restrictions there may sometimes prove a good guide here as to the advisability, as apart from the legality, of the joinder.(6) Sect. 26 (now O. 1. r. 1) has now been amended so as to permit plaintiffs to join in whom any right to relief exists in respect of, or arising out of, the same act or transaction, that is, where if separate suits were brought any common question of law or fact would arise.

it might at any time before the settlement of issues have been returned for amendment.(1) If the plaint, having been returned for amendment, was not amended, it might have been rejected.(2) If this was not done and subsequently objection was taken by the defendant, which might be either in the written statement or in a motion to take the plaint off the file or on the settlement of issues,(3) or the Court, on further consideration, considered that there were grounds for considering the plaint bad for misjoinder, the Judge should have raised an issue and decided it, and dismissed the suit.(4) If, however, the Judge felt doubtful whether his decision on the point of misjoinder would stand, he might have properly framed the issues of fact for the determination of the case, and then dismissed the suit for misjoinder without recording any finding on the other issues.(5) Further, the circumstances must have been such that the first Court had no alternative open to it but to proceed to trial of the matters of fact upon the preliminary determination of which the point raised as to misjoinder turns. It might then have dismissed the suit.(6) As to the present Code, vide post. Where the District Judge disallowed the objection on the ground that it was not taken at the earliest possible moment, namely, in the written statement, but the objection was taken at the settlement of issues before trial, it was given effect to on second appeal.(1) The power given to the Court to return a plaint was only discretionary, and if it was shown that the form of a suit was bad, by reason that there has been misjoinder of parties, or of causes of action, it could not be said that a party was precluded from raising the objection and taking it at the hearing of the suit or on appeal. There was nothing to warrant the proposition that when a Court of first instance decided a question of misjoinder in favour of the plaintiffs, there was an end of the matter, and that the defendant was precluded from raising the question in appeal.(2) Where such a question has been raised, the Appellate Court has allowed a suit or claim to be withdrawn.(3) Where the appeal has proceeded, the question has been raised in some cases whether the Appeal Court was precluded from reversing a decision on the ground of misjoinder, by reason of sect. 578 of the former Code. In some cases, misjoinder of causes of action has been considered an irregularity not affecting jurisdiction or the merits of the case.(4) In other cases it has been held that, assuming but not deciding that misjoinder was a mere irregularity, it did affect the merits.(5) In other cases it appears to have been held that misjoinder of causes of action was of the nature not of an irregularity, but an illegality.(6) The law upon the point was thus unsettled.(1) Probably in some cases it will be found that the merits were affected. Where, however, this was not so, and particularly where no objection had been taken (a circumstance in itself indicating that the party has not suffered disadvantage), the Court would probably have acted rightly in not dismissing the suit upon what, in the supposed circumstances, would be a technical objection. Where effect was given to the objection, the Appellate Court, in the under-mentioned case,(2) did not dismiss the suit, but rejected the plaint, directing the plaintiffs to pay the costs throughout. In other cases, the Court, both in first and second appeal, has dismissed (3) the suit for misjoinder. As to the present Code, vide post.

The plaint might also be returned for amendment under s. 53 before settlement of issues. In Sudhendhu v. Durga, 14 C. at p. 439, the Court held, that with reference to ss. 31 and 53 of the Code of 1882, the Court should not have dismissed but rejected the plaint. It is not clear whether issues had been settled, but neither sections appear to apply. S. 31 related to misjoinder of parties, and s. 53 dealt with rejection for want of cause of action. In Janokinath v. Ramrunjun, 4 C. at pp. 953, 951 (1897), the Court said that when distinct causes of action are improperly joined the Court should not dismiss the suit but try them separately. This observation was obiter, and s. 45 contemplated separation, not where the joinder was illegal, but where it was permitted, though a joint trial was inconvenient (vide post). In Hurro Monee v. Onookool, 8 W. R. 461 (1867), it was said that the Court should have called upon the plaintiff to elect against which defendant he would proceed.

Objections to misjoinder, as all other objections to the frame of a suit, should, of course, be taken as early as possible. An objection taken not in the written statement, but at the settlement of issues before trial, has been given effect to.(4) An objection has been held to be too late after the case has been tried and decided.(5) And it has been said that an objection taken for the first time in special, or possibly in regular appeal, might not be allowed to prevail.(6) Phear, J., said: (7) "As a general rule, if an objection on this ground is pressed and carried to a decision in the first Court, this Court will, even upon special appeal, upon its being shown to be well founded, give the objector the benefit of it. But, on the other hand, if it is not pressed and carried to a decision in the first Court, and if the parties go to trial in the same way as if the objection had not been made, then the objection will not be given effect to at a later stage, unless it appears clearly that there was a defect in the original trial, in consequence of the misjoinder of the causes of action to which the objection is directed. . . . This Court has always held that it is the duty of the first Court, which receives the plaint and entertains the suit, to take care that the parties are not prejudiced by any unfair complication in the matter which the plaintiff charges against the defendants. But if the parties have chosen to go to trial and have not insisted upon the first Court taking a step of this kind, then it may very fairly be taken against them at a later stage of the appeal proceedings that they have not, in fact, suffered any material disadvantage in the trial, unless it be distinctly shown that there was such disadvantage."

To turn to the present Code, it does not, as sect. 53 of the last did, specifically deal with return for amendment, but O. VI. r. 17 allows of amendment, and the Court may, it is presumed, return the plaint for that purpose. Under the last Code (sect. 54 (d)) a plaint so returned and not amended was rejected. This provision has not been re-enacted, but O. VI. r. 18 deals with failure to amend after order. As regards an objection on the score of misjoinder, r. 7 of this Order provides for its being taken at the earliest opportunity, and if not so taken the objection is deemed waived. Even if taken, the objection will, under sect. 99, count for nothing in appeal unless it be shown that such misjoinder has affected the merits of the case. Here, therefore, as elsewhere, the Code has diminished the importance of merely technical objections.

Only certain claims to be joined for recovery of immoveable property.

4. No cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property, except-

(a) claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed or any part thereof;

(b) claims for damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof is held; and

(c) claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action:

Provided that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to prevent any party in a suit for foreclosure or redemption from asking to be put into possession of the mortgaged property.

Claims by or against executor, administrator or heir.

5. No claim by or against an executor, administrator or heir, as such, shall be joined with claims by or against him personally, unless the last-mentioned claims are alleged to arise with reference to the estate in respect of which the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued as executor, administrator or heir, or are such as he was entitled to, or liable for, jointly with the deceased person whom he represents.

Origin of rules.—These two rules represent, with the amendments italicized, sect. 44 of the last Code, which it was stated was not very happily expressed.(1) R. 4 is taken from English O. 18, r. 2; the words "or to obtain a declaration of title to immoveable property" in the former section were added to meet the decision in Gledhill v. Hunter,(1) but have been now omitted. R. 5 is taken from English O. 18, r. 5; the word "heir" having been added, as in this country it is not an executor or administrator alone who represents the estate of a deceased person.(2) The words after "heir" have also been added.

Objections for misjoinder.—Under sect. 54 (d) of the last Code, the plaint might have been rejected in case of failure to amend, on its being returned for the purpose under sect. 53 of the same Code.(3) If the Court, instead of rejecting the plaint or returning it for amendment, proceeded to trial, it should not, it was held, subsequently dismiss the suit for misjoinder, but dispose of it on the merits.(4) The objection being of a dilatory character, and beside the merits, must have been taken in the Court of first instance; if not, it was deemed waived.(5) It was not allowed to be taken for the first time on appeal, and where it was raised for the first time on appeal, the High Court, on second appeal, declined to entertain it.(6) A successful objection for misjoinder is a cause for which time may be deducted under sect. 14 of the Limitation Act.(7) Sect. 54 is now O. VII. r. 11, but clause (d) has not been re-enacted. See now O. VI. r. 18.

Leave.—It will be observed that leave can only be applied for in the case of r. 4. R. 5 is absolute Application should be made before the plaint is filed, though possibly, on good reason shown, leave may be given afterwards.(8) A plaintiff may, with the leave of the Court, join causes of action, but he is nowhere compelled to do so.(9) And even in regard to the excepted causes of action which may be joined, the exception implies only a permission of joinder, but does not render it obligatory.(10) Where leave is applied for, the question whether it will be granted must depend upon convenience and the circumstances of the case. Amongst these, the Court will consider the connection between the claims sought to be joined. So leave has been given to join where it was sought to recover immoveable and moveable property comprised in the same instrument, and to join claims in respect of personal and real estate, where both estates rested on a common gift in the same will.(11) No appeal lay from an order rejecting an application for leave, but where the effect of the order was to reject the plaint, it was held that the order was a decree, and, as such, appealable.(12)

Jurisdiction.—Where causes of action are united, jurisdiction depends on the value of the aggregate subject-matters.(13)

Rule 4. "Cause of action."—The rule presupposes a case where there are two or more various causes of action, one of which is to recover immoveable property. Several causes of action to recover immoveable property may be joined. The rule does not prohibit this, but a joinder with such causes of action of a different character, except as excepted in the rule.(1) If, however, the Court considers it inadvisable to try the several causes of action in one suit, it can order separate trials.(2) There is nothing, moreover, irregular in seeking to recover in one suit immoveable and moveable property if the cause of action is the same in respect of both.(3) These decisions appear to be embodied in the new clause (c). And even a claim for possession of certain immoveable property, based on the first paragraph of sect. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, may, it has been held, be joined without leave, with a claim for title to that property, and for damages for dispossession from it.(4) Claims which do not amount to a new cause of action, but which are mere machinery, such as a prayer for an injunction or receiver, may be joined without leave.(5) But it has been held that an injunction cannot be asked for where it was not merely ancillary to the claim for possession.(6)

"Suit for the recovery of immoveable property."—The expression "suit for the recovery of immoveable property," which is that used in sect. 16, is more limited than the expression "suit for immoveable property," or "for land" within the meaning of the Charter. A suit may be one "for land" within the meaning of the latter, and not within this rule.(7) So it has been held that a claim for specific performance of an agreement to sell a share in a house might be joined with a claim on a promissory note.(8) So, again, a suit for recovery of a mortgage-debt with an alternative prayer for sale, has been held not a suit for recovery of immoveable property.(9) Wilson, J., said: (10) "It seems to me that a suit for 'the recovery of immoveable property' is a suit founded upon an existing title in which the plaintiff seeks to get possession of the property itself. The words 'to obtain a declaration,' etc., seem to me to apply to a case where a title exists, and the plaintiff asks to have that fact declared, not to a case where he seeks to have something done, which, when done, will give him a title." Immoveable property in this rule includes a right of way.(11)

Court, said: "Now, when can it be said that a claim is made by 'an heir as such'? Plainly, such a claim is made when the plaintiff rests his claim entirely on the allegation that he is the heir of another, and, as such, asserts a right against the defendant." So where a portion of a claim was founded upon the plaintiff's alleged right as heir of A, and another part of the claim had no reference to A's estate, it was held that there was a misjoinder, and that one of the claims must be struck out.(1) The Allahabad High Court has, however, dissented from this decision, holding that the heir referred to in the rule is an heir suing or being sued in his representative capacity, who, like an executor or administrator, represents the estate of a deceased person; and that it is impossible to hold that the rule precludes a person from joining a claim for property acquired by himself, with a claim for property inherited by him from another, when he does not represent persons other than himself.(2) And more recently Jenkins, C.J., explained the meaning of the rule to be as follows:- Those to whom it relates have the common characteristic that they owe their legal condition to the death of another. But there are others of whom this can be predicated, as, for instance, legatees or next-of-kin who are not named in the rule. Executors, administrators, and heirs have this characteristic in common not shared by legatees and next-of-kin, namely, that not only do they acquire title from the deceased, but they may represent him.(3) And in a recent case in the Bombay High Court it was held that a claim for maintenance by the widow of a Mitakshara coparcener was not against the estate of her deceased husband (since his interest was extinguished by his death); but was against the property of which he was a coparcener; and therefore there was no misjoinder when she sued the surviving coparceners for her stridhan property and also for maintenance out of the joint-estate.(4)

Power of Court to order separate trials.

6. Where it appears to the Court that any causes of action joined in one suit cannot be conveniently tried or disposed of together, the Court may order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient.

Joinder of causes of action.—This rule corresponds, subject to certain alterations, with the second paragraph of sect. 45 of the last Code and with O. 18, r. 1 and portion of O. 16, r. 1 of the English rules. See note to O. II. r. 3, the first paragraph of which embodies the first paragraph of sect. 45 of the Code of 1882. That rule relates only to the joinder of causes of action. It assumes that the action has been rightly constituted under O. I. r. 1, ante.(5) Under the English rule it has been held that, save in actions for the recovery of land and in actions by a trustee in bankruptcy, the plaintiff may without leave, but subject to rules 8, 9, join in one action, not several actions, but several "causes of action," (1) which term has been held to comprise every fact which is material to be proved to enable the plaintiff to succeed; (2) the entire set of facts which give rise to an enforceable claim; every fact which, if traversed, the plaintiff must prove in order to obtain judgment,(3) so connected that, as regards evidence, etc., they can conveniently be disposed of together.(4) But this joinder is "always subject to the underlying principle that the burden lies on the plaintiff of proving his case, and that no extra burden should be imposed on the defendant through the plaintiff needlessly enlarging the area of dispute."(5)

Order for separation.—The Court might, under the terms of sect. 45 of the last Code, order separate trials of any "such causes of action"—that is, causes of action which might have been joined in the same suit under the first paragraph of that section. The second paragraph, therefore, had no application in cases of misjoinder of causes of action forbidden by the first paragraph, as to which the only course open to the Court was that of returning the plaint for amendment, or rejecting it if not amended, or dismissing the suit (vide ante).(6) Under sect. 45 the Court could, suo motu, or on the application of the party, order separate trials. This can be done now under rule which consolidates the provisions of the second paragraph of sect. 45, of sects. 46, 47 of the last Code. The power given did not, it was held, extend to an order for the dismissal of defendants, and that a fresh suit should be brought against them. Such an order would not be one for the "separate disposal" (or separate trial) of the several causes of action; it would be an order preventing the disposal of them in the suit before the Court. If the Court found that the separate causes of action could not be conveniently tried together, it should, it was held, deal with them separately as sub-suits under the title and number of the principal suit from which they spring.(7) So in a suit on title in which the recovery of immoveable property and mesne profits are claimed, the Court may order separate trials in respect of the claim for the recovery of the immoveable property, and in respect of the claim for mesne profits.(8)

A direction to file separate plaints did not, it was held, come within the scope of the section which did not require the plaintiff to file separate plaints, but provided for the separate trial of the several causes of action contained in the one plaint, filed on the institution of a suit.(9) As already stated, the order which the Court might make was one for separation, and that only in the case where joinder was not forbidden. In the under-mentioned case,(1) however, the Court appeared to consider that even if two causes of action had been combined in the suit, it had power under sect. 45 of the last Code and would be justified in allowing two causes of action to be united in the case, inasmuch as it was convenient that the matter should be disposed of in one suit rather than two. The power, however, which was given by that section was to order separation, and a definite provision of law cannot be evaded on the ground of convenience.(2) In an earlier case in which the Judge stated that, evidence having been gone into, he preferred trying each cause of action against each defendant separately, instead of rejecting the plaint on the ground of misjoinder, it was pointed out that he had misconceived the extent of his powers in the matter in considering the matter one simply of convenience, and that if he were disposed to try the causes of action against all the defendants in one suit, he was at liberty to do so.(3) Nor again, of course, could the Court, where there had been a misjoinder, even though no inconvenience might have resulted to the defendants, pass a separate decree against each of them.(4) An Appellate Court had power, apparently, to order separate trials.(5) Except where the parties agreed, the order could only be made before the first hearing.(6) There is no such express limitation now, but doubtless the same rule will be ordinarily followed.

Order confining suit.—Sects. 46 and 47 of the last Code dealt with a different order from that in the second paragraph of sect. 45. Under the latter section, the Court dealt with the causes of action separately as sub-suits. The former, however, enabled a defendant, who was embarrassed by the form of the suit, to get the trial confined to a reasonable aggregate of causes of action, and in such a case the other causes must needs be left over for another suit.(7) This provision, as the other, assumed that the causes of action might be legally joined, though such joinder might be inconvenient, in which case a defendant might apply or the Court might act. It did not apply where there was misjoinder. It applied where there were several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendant jointly. A case where separate causes of action were alleged against two defendants did not come within the rule.(8) In sect. 46, as in sect. 45 of the last Code, the words "before the first hearing" were held to be imperative.(9) Order XVIII. rule 9 of the Judicature Acts,(10) allows such amendment as may be necessitated by the procedure adopted.(1) In the under-mentioned case it was held that it was not necessary to dismiss a suit in which claims upon different causes of action and against different persons have been joined together, and that it ought to be tried, so far as relates to the joint claim, against all the defendants, the Court excluding from its consideration any claim not common against all.(2) But this could be done only by amendment by the plaintiff, as the second paragraph of sect. 45 of the former Code was applicable only to the causes of action which might have been joined in the same suit.(3)

The present rule does not expressly refer to orders confining suits, but the provision in this respect which formerly existed still seems to remain, as appears from the use of the word "disposed" and the authority given to the Court "to make such other order as may be expedient," which would include such an order confining the suit as was referred to in sects. 46 and 47 of the last Code, which this rule is intended to replace.

Consolidation of suits.—The rule deals with the separate trial of causes of action united in one suit. Neither does it, nor does any other section of the Code, provide for the consolidation of several suits. Consolidation may be ordered by consent of parties.(4) And where the parties do not agree, consolidation is sometimes ordered by the Court as a matter of expediency (5) on general principles of equity and justice. So where the parties to the suit sought to be consolidated were the same, and the subject-matter of the suits also was the same, the Court made an order for consolidation.(6) Where, on the other hand, the parties and the subject-matter were different, consolidation was refused.(7) And three suits were held to have been improperly tried together, where, from the very nature of the case, the evidence in each suit had to be given separately.(8) In the Falls of Ettrick,(9) an application by the impugnant for the consolidation of three salvage actions was refused, as the promovent resisted it on the ground that the several claims were based upon different circumstances, and were in themselves conflicting; Sale, J., observing that there being no general or special rules for the consolidation of actions, the only course left in the case was to follow the analogy of the practice of the Court of Admiralty in England. The order for consolidation may be obtained either by a plaintiff (10) or defendant.(1) Where the lower Court has consolidated suits, the defendants may prefer one appeal.(2) Where the plaintiff applied for consolidation, which was refused, the Court was held to have acted wrongly in treating without consent all the suits as governed by the judgment given in one of them.(3)

Postponement of suit pending decision of test action.—Where several plaintiffs have commenced several suits against the same defendant, the Court may, under its general jurisdiction, on the application of the plaintiffs, enlarge the time for taking the next step in the rest of the actions until one of them has been tried as a test action, and where the selected action fails to be a real trial of the issue, another of the actions may be substituted as a test action.(4) When several actions had been commenced against different defendants for the same libel, the Court refused to consolidate them, but ordered a stay of proceedings in all the actions except such one as the plaintiff might select, and if he was not satisfied with the result of the trial of that action, he was to select and try one other action, all the several defendants in the other actions undertaking to be bound by the verdict in the test actions, and to have judgment entered against them respectively for the maximum amount of damages awarded in either of the test actions.(5) Where, by an order of the Court, all the defendants in several actions are bound by the result of a selected action, and the defendant in the selected action refuses to appeal against the judgment, the Court has, it has been held, power to substitute another of the defendants for the purpose of prosecuting an appeal.(6)

Objections as to misjoinder.

7. All objections on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived.

Objections.—See as to this notes to O. I. r. 13, ante, which deals with objections where the misjoinder complained of is of parties. It was held that even on second appeal, if a suit was found to be bad for misjoinder of causes of action, the proper procedure to follow would be not to dismiss the suit altogether, but to direct the Court below to perform the duty which that Court ought to have performed, namely, to return the plaint for amendment.(7) See notes to O. II. r. 3.

ORDER III.

Recognized Agents and Pleaders.

Appearances, etc., may be in person, by recognized agent or by pleader.

1. Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognized agent, or by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf.

Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so directs, be made by the party in person.

"Appearance."—These words ("appear" and "act") have a well-defined and well-known meaning. To appear for a client in Court is to be present and to represent him in the various stages of the litigation at which it is necessary that the client should be present in Court himself, or by some representative.(1) There may be appearance if the pleader, though instructed, is not prepared to proceed with the case.(2) Under the last Code it was held that where, on the day fixed for hearing, a party was present in person merely for the purpose of applying for an adjournment, which was refused, he must be taken to have "appeared" within the meaning of Chapter VII. of that Code, the provisions of which are replaced by this and following rules. The party has appeared in person. The purpose for which he appeared, or the action which he took on appearance, are immaterial. But where the party is absent and an application for adjournment is made on his behalf by a pleader who has no other instructions, and whose functions are at an end when the adjournment is refused, in that case the party had not appeared within the meaning of the Chapter.(3) Where the pleader who applies for an adjournment is accompanied by a recognized agent of the party, but the latter neither makes any application, nor does any act, the question is whether he intends to appear, and, in fact, does appear for the party in the exercise of his powers under this rule.

This rule is merely permissive and enabling. If the recognized agent, although able to do so, does not think proper to conduct the case on behalf of his principal, his mere presence in Court is not an "appearance" in the suit. An appearance may be made by a pleader or a recognized agent; but the concurrence of the pleader or agent is essential. As soon as he ceases to intend to represent the principal, the latter is unrepresented.(1) The words in the last Code after "party" were "to a suit or appeal." These words are now omitted. The section will still apply to appeals as proceedings in suits.

"Act."—"To act for a client in Court is to take on his behalf in the Court, or in the offices of the Court, the necessary steps that must be taken in the course of the litigation in order that his case may be properly laid before the Court." (2) The word "act" is, however, taken to refer only to ordinary acts, and thus not to include the instituting or defending of a suit, which a recognized agent cannot do in his own name.(3) Nor does a mere power to sue authorize an agent to enter into an agreement with a pleader to pay him more than a reasonable remuneration.(4)

"Except where otherwise expressly provided."—This may be either by the Code itself or by any other law for the time being in force. Thus, this rule is expressly made subject to O. XXXIII. r. 3 in respect of applications to sue in formâ pauperis.(5) Again, clause 10 of the Charter provides that no persons but advocates, vakils, or attorneys of the High Court shall be allowed to plead or act (6) for any suitor in the High Court. So it has been held that the former section did not authorize a recognized agent to address a High Court as the suitor himself may do, because that clause forbids that for every person whatever except advocates and vakils,(7) and that an authorized agent could not file a petition of appeal on the appellate side of the High Court.(8) Under the Rules of the High Court an advocate may appear and plead only. He cannot therefore file an appeal in the registrar's office.(9)

"Party in person."—Where a barrister or pleader appears before the Court as a litigant in person, he must not address the Court from the advocate's table or in robes, but from the same place and in the same way as any ordinary member of the public.(10)

"By a pleader."—As to the meaning of this term, which includes advocates, vakils, and attorneys, see sect. 2, ante. If a party has more than one pleader, the senior has the entire control of the case, and it is not open to the junior pleader to take any ground of appeal which the senior has not thought fit to argue, except when the senior has obtained the permission of the Court to the taking of that course.(1) A pleader represents both counsel and attorney in that he can both plead and act, whereas the former pleads and the latter acts. As to the respective powers of these various classes of legal practitioners, a subject which is beyond the scope of the work, see the references given below.(2) The Calcutta High Court holds (3) that administrative acts required to be done in the offices of the Courts may be done on a pleader's responsibility by his bonâ fide clerks, and a District Judge has no authority to define the acts which may be so done by the pleader himself and by his clerks respectively, as High Courts alone possess such authority. The Punjab Chief Court, however, has dissented from this decision, inasmuch as the Code does not provide for the delegation by a pleader of any portion of his duties to others, and on the ground that if a pleader is allowed to perform some of them by deputy there is no reason why he should not be allowed to do so as regards the whole.(4)

"Duly appointed."—The Court may inquire as to the agent's authority, and if under r. 1 it substitutes the name of the principal, it does not decide that the agent had authority.(5) The words "duly appointed" do not simply mean a person duly appointed by the party in the suit, but a pleader duly appointed according to the law regarding pleaders in force in the particular Court.(6) Again, the validity of the appointment must be considered with reference to the general law relating to the employment of legal practitioners. Thus a solicitor or attorney, having discharged his client, cannot change sides and act for the opposite party.(7) As to persons authorized to act for Government or appointed to prosecute or defend Princes and Chiefs, see O. XXVII. rr. 2, 4 and sect. 85. Vakalatnamahs, whether executed by principals or their attorneys or agents, and mookhtarnamas, under the authority of which vakalatnamahs may have been executed, do not require to be verified on oath, the responsibility in regard to their being properly and correctly executed resting entirely with the pleaders.(8)

(a) persons holding powers-of-attorney, authorizing them to make and do such appearances, applications and acts on behalf of such parties;

(b) persons carrying on trade or business for and in the names of parties not resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court within which limits the appearance, application or act is made or done, in matters connected with such trade or business only, where no other agent is expressly authorized to make and do such appearances, applications and acts.

Power of attorney.—As to stamp, see Act I. of 1879, clause 50; and vakalatnamahs, notes to last rule. A person holding a power may refuse to act on it.(1) A warrant of attorney to an attorney of a defendant to receive a plaint, confess action, suffer or consent to a judgment or decree, empowers the attorney to accept service and appear for the defendant.(2) The power must authorize the person "to make and do such appearances," etc. A mere authority to look after a case does not make the donee of the power a recognized agent so as to be able to apply to refer a case to arbitration.(3) The authority given must be construed with reference to the special purpose for which the power was granted. General words imply authority to do all that the principal himself could do. They mean that the agent can do all that is necessary for the prosecution of the suit in the ordinary way. He cannot, for instance, enter into an agreement with a pleader to pay him more than a reasonable remuneration, nor could he bring the case to a close in a special manner by joining in a reference to arbitration, or by offering to be bound by the oath of the opposite party given in a particular form.(4) The question of special and general power has become immaterial under this rule.(5)

Clause (a). "Persons holding powers of attorney."—The terms of this clause in the former Code were different. It was limited to persons holding general powers of attorney within certain local limits, that is, from parties not resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction. The meaning to be attached to the word "reside" has been dealt with in the comments on sect. 20. The expression "not resident" appears to have been introduced into the former section in the Code of 1877, to avoid an agent acting as a recognized agent during a casual temporary absence of the principal, as he was held to be able to do under the Code of 1859.(6) The section, however, it was held, was to be construed broadly, so as not to prevent a creditor from enforcing his claims against his debtors; and a person who went for a few months from his usual place of residence to his native province to get his sister married was held during his absence to be "not resident" at that place.(1) In the case cited, Melville, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed that "it may be supposed that the Legislature intended to give the benefit of this provision to all persons, and especially to traders, whose interests might be seriously compromised, if, during their absence from home and their place of business, they could leave no one behind who could represent them in Court, as well as conduct their business." If the principal was resident within the jurisdiction, then the agent was not a recognized agent within the meaning of clause (a) of the former section. An application for execution was not made "in accordance with law" (2) when made by a general attorney of the decree-holder at a time when the latter himself was resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree.(3) The Legislature has considered it unnecessary to preserve the limitations above noted, and has made the sub-clause general.

Certificated mukhtars.—A mukhtar was at one time not considered a recognized agent.(4) Clause (b) of the former section expressly recognized mukhtars. This clause has been now omitted as unnecessary. It is included in sub-clause (a), which is general in its terms.

Clause (b). "Persons carrying on trade."—As to "carrying on business," see notes to sect. 20, ante. The words "where no other agent is expressly authorized" were, under the Code of 1859, held to imply that the persons so carrying on business for or in the names of the parties were purely gomastahs or agents, and not partners.(5) This decision, however, was subsequently dissented from.(6) These latter cases dealt with the point whether service on one partner for his co-partner was a good service, which was the case under the provisions of sect. 74 of the Code of 1882, and is so under O. XXX. r. 3 (6) of the present Code; but the question is still open as regards other acts, appearances and applications. This section and O. V. r. 13 are to be construed together, being intended to carry out the same scheme of relief.(7) It would seem that in order to constitute a recognized agent, the business carried on by him should be continuous, and not occasional or desultory. firm simply employed by the owners of a ship visiting Bombay to procure freight for her for a particular voyage, could not, it was held, be regarded under ordinary circumstances as carrying on business in the name of the owners of such ship.(1) A gomastah of a firm ceases to be a recognized agent as soon as the firm ceases to exist.(2) But it is different where a firm does exist, though not actually carrying on business. The survivor of a firm which has ceased to carry on business, who is engaged in collecting the assets of such firm and otherwise winding up its affairs, is a recognized agent of the owner of such firm.(3) A political agent is not, as such, a recognized agent.(4)

Objection to agent acting.—An agent cannot act under this rule so long as his principal is within the jurisdiction; but if he does, and there has thus been an irregularity, the Appellate Court ought not, on that account, to dismiss the suit, unless the irregularity has affected the merits of the case.(5) Similarly, where a recognized agent obtained a decree in appeal without objection, it was held the debtor could not, in execution of it, object to the agent.(6)

Punjab; Oudh; Central Provinces.—The last clause of sect. 37 of the former Code created an exception in the case of these Provinces. This has now been omitted as no longer necessary. The former Chief Commissionership of Oudh has been included in the Lieutenant-Governorship of the United Provinces. See as to former section Notification (7) (Punjab), October 3, 1877, No. 3857, Punjab Gazette, October 4, 1877, Part I. p. 391; Notification (Oudh), July 18, 1878, No. 522A, N.W.P. and Oudh Gazette, July 27, 1878, p. 1058. In some of the Scheduled Districts there are special statutory provisions as to recognized agents, as in Ajmere (see Ajmere, Regulation I. of 1877, sect. 28).

Service of process on recognized agent.

3. (1) Processes served on the recognized agent of a party shall be as effectual as if the same had been served on the party in person, unless the Court otherwise directs.

(2) The provisions for the service of process on a party to a suit shall apply to the service of process on his recognized agent.

Service on agent.—The rule is of an enabling character, and does not, of course, bar service of notice on the parties themselves.(8) Further, a person to whom a power of attorney has been given may refuse to act upon

Appointment of pleader.

4. (1) The appointment of a pleader to make or do any appearance, application or act for any person shall be in writing, and shall be signed by such person or by his recognized agent or by some other person duly authorized by power-of-attorney to act in this behalf.

(2) Every such appointment, when accepted by a pleader, shall be filed in Court, and shall be considered to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court, by a writing signed by the client or the pleader, as the case may be, and filed in Court, or until the client or the pleader dies or until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client.

(3) No advocate of any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or of any Chief Court, and no advocate of any other High Court who is a barrister shall be required to present any document empowering him to act.

Service of process on pleader.

5. Any process served on the pleader of any party or left at the office or ordinary residence of such pleader, and whether the same is for the personal appearance of the party or not, shall be presumed to be duly communicated and made known to the party whom the pleader represents, and, unless the Court otherwise directs, shall be as effectual for all purposes as if the same had been given to or served on the party in person.

Service of process on pleader.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 18. A service on the petitioner's attorney on the record is good, even when decree nisi has been obtained in her favour in a divorce suit, and the petitioner has left India for England.(3) Service of notice of appeal upon respondent's pleader is good service on him.(4) So also is service of summons calling on a party to appear and give evidence.(5) Personal appearance to give evidence is within the meaning of the words "personal appearance of the party." "Left at the office."—These words, it has been held in England, do not mean that a process will be considered served on a pleader, simply if it is pushed under the door of the office, or dealt with in some other similar manner, Agent to accept service.

Appointment to be in writing and to be filed in Court.

(2) Such appointment may be special or general and shall be made by an instrument in writing signed by the principal, and such instrument or, if the appointment is general, a certified copy thereof shall be filed in Court.

Agent to receive process.—Service on such agent will be sufficient in any case, as provided for in O. V. r. 12 of the Code.(2) This rule corresponds with sects. 50, 51, Act VIII. of 1859, and sect. 41 of the last Code.

ORDER IV.

Institution of Suits.

Suit to be commenced by plaint.

1. (1) Every suit shall be instituted by presenting a plaint to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf.

(2) Every plaint shall comply with the rules contained in Orders VI and VII, so far as they are applicable.

ORDER V.

Issue and Service of Summons.

Issue of Summons.

Summons.

1. (1) When a suit has been duly instituted a summons may be issued to the defendant to appear and answer the claim on a day to be therein specified: [s. (

Provided that no such summons shall be issued when the defendant has appeared at the presentation of the plaint and admitted the plaintiff's claim.

(2) A defendant to whom a summons has been issued under sub-rule (1) may appear—

(a) in person, or

(b) by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, or

(c) by a pleader accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions.

(3) Every such summons shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court.

Summons.—Instead of the words in the former section (sect. 64), "When the plaint has been registered and the copies or concise statements required by sect. 58 have been filed," the present section runs "when a suit has been duly instituted." The first duty of the Court after the filing of the plaint is [provided that the defendant was alive at that date, for if not, the suit cannot proceed (1)] to summon the defendant, whether he be an adult or not.(2) Natural justice requires that before an order is passed against a man he should be heard, and a decree against one who has never been summoned is not binding upon him.(3) A summons, therefore, is the first of the several writs which are incidental to the proceedings in a suit, as being the official notification to a defendant that he has been sued and should appear in Court and answer the claim.(4) Generally, and in the absence of any special rule, the summons should be in the language of the Court, and addressed to the defendant himself and not to his agent. In the first place, the form of the summons should be such as that it can be served; then it should contain such full particulars of the description of the person summoned as will render it unlikely that the person served should mistake his identity. Secondly, the contents should be such as to acquaint the defendant as to the nature of the claim made against him. The title of the suit and the plaintiff's name should be stated, as also the amount and nature of the claim. The Form requires also a statement of the particulars of the claim. What these particulars are has not been judicially determined; but the question is not of much practical importance, as the summons is in every case to be accompanied by a copy of the plaint or of a concise statement of it. Forms of summons are given which are to be used with such variation as the circumstances of each case may require, and are a guide as to what a summons should contain. Thirdly, the day of appearance is to be specified in the summons, and, according to Form 180 of the Code of 1882, it should have at its foot a memorandum stating hours of attendance at the office. Even where there is no express rule to that effect, the hour fixed for appearance or attendance should also be stated; though, considering the language of sect. 96 of the last Code, in which the attendance was required on the day fixed in the summons, the mention of the exact hour did not appear to be material.(1) The words "to appear" refer to appearance under O. IX. r. 6, post.(2) It is desirable that a summons should contain all that is required; at the same time, formalism is not favoured at present, and it will be sufficient if the summons substantially fulfils its purpose of giving the defendant notice.(3) And a person by appearing and defending may waive all objections arising from want of service or defect in the service of summons.(4) A fresh summons is sometimes required. There are no provisions as to the issue of successive summons, though the practice as to their issue is recognized in O. IX. r. 5, post. An application for fresh summons to appear should not, however, be made until the first has been returned into Court,(5) and should generally be supported by grounds showing that it was not by any default of the applicant that the summons was not served.(6)

"Signed" and "sealed."—As to the meaning of the word "signed," see sect. 2, ante.(7) The Letters Patent for the High Courts and the Acts (8) relating to the other Civil Courts provide for the use of seals. The seal is but one element of the proof of authenticity, and the better view is that its omission is a matter of form rather than of substance, as its omission does not prevent the writ imparting to the parties, against whom it is issued, information that an action is instituted against them. In the same way, the signature is the official authentication of the seal of which the person signing is the keeper, and the better opinion is that an unsigned writ is not void.(1) The summons is to be signed either by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, such as the Clerk of the Court or Registrar, where there is one.

Proviso.—If the defendant voluntarily appears, an appearance which is usually designated gratis, there is no necessity to issue a summons. In case of such appearance, when the defendant admits the claim, the Judge, if satisfied of the defendant's identity, is bound to pass a judgment in favour of the plaintiff, and no question of fraudulent appearance can be gone into at the time; but if by the practice of the Court there are specific rules as to the order in which cases are to be called on, it does not appear that a Judge is bound to dispose of a case either when the plaint is filed or at any subsequent time before it is called on in regular course; and the voluntary appearance of the defendant and his willingness to admit the debt do not make any difference in this respect.(2)

Copy or statement annexed to summons.

2. Every summons shall be accompanied by a copy of the plaint or, if so permitted, by a concise statement.

Concise statement.—This should be of the nature of the claim made and of the relief or remedy sought in the suit.

Court may order defendant or plaintiff to appear in person.

3. (1) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the defendant, the summons shall order him to appear in person in Court on the day therein specified.

(2) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the plaintiff on the same day, it shall make an order for such appearance.

Personal attendance.—Act VIII. of 1859, sects. 42 and 66 of last Code. An order passed for the personal attendance of the plaintiff after his appearance by a pleader on the day fixed for the settlement of issues, and after their settlement, was held not to be an order passed under sect. 42, Act VIII. of 1859, or one to which the provisions of sect. 117, Act VIII., were applicable, although it might have been passed under sects. 127 or 166 of that Act. Further, looking at the severe penalties attached by the law to the non-attendance of parties ordered to attend, great caution and discretion should be used in ordering their personal attendance.(3) As to the result of non-appearance, see O. IX. r. 12, post.

Appearance in person.—This is sect. 42 of the Code of 1859 and 67 of last Code with modifications italicized. In a rent suit to which the provisions of this section were applicable, and in which the plaintiff improperly summoned failed to attend and his suit was struck off, it was held he should apply for revival.(1)

5. The Court shall determine, at the time of issuing the summons, whether it shall be for the settlement of issues only, or for the final disposal of the suit; and the summons shall contain a direction accordingly:

Summons to be either to settle issues or for final disposal.

Provided that, in every suit heard by a Court of Small Causes, the summons shall be for the final disposal of the suit.

Summons.—This is sect. 68 of the last Code unaltered. As to this section,(2) see below.

6. The day for the appearance of the defendant shall be fixed with reference to the current business of the Court, the place of residence of the defendant and the time necessary for the service of the summons; and the day shall be so fixed as to allow the defendant sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer on such day.

Fixing day for appearance of defendant.

Sufficient time must be allowed.—See sect. 45 of Code of 1859. What may be sufficient time in a particular case can only be determined by considering the peculiar circumstances of the case, and this was so stated in the second clause of the former section, now omitted. The time must be sufficient not only to enable a party to appear, but to answer. The nature of the rights involved in the suit, and the importance of the claim made in it, as well as the actual distance of the defendant from the Court, and the facilities for obtaining legal advice, must also be taken into consideration in determining the sufficiency of the time allowed. In the case cited below,(1) the claim involved a right to landed and other property of the aggregate value of upwards of Rs.6000, and was likely to raise questions of Mahomedan law; and only two days having been allowed from the issue of the summons, it was held that the time allowed was insufficient. In another case,(2) the summons was served on the 17th April by a copy of it being fixed on the outer door of the defendant's place of business at Poona, while the defendant was at Sholapur, and it was held that two days were not a sufficient time to enable him to attend for defence at Poona. It was held that the Subordinate Judge should have postponed the hearing. If the time is unreasonably short the Appellate Court will interfere.(3) In the under-mentioned case (4) the Court said: "We take this opportunity to call the special attention of the Courts below to the urgent necessity there is that they should carefully themselves see that due and reasonable time is given in all cases for the service of notices, in order that the Courts themselves may not be made the instruments of fraud and injustice by means of those processes, the vigilant superintendence of the issue and service of which properly and justly is one of their most important duties."

Summons to order defendant to produce documents relied on by him.

7. The summons to appear and answer shall order the defendant to produce all documents in his possession or power upon which he intends to rely in support of his case.

On issue of summons for final disposal, defendant to be directed to produce his witnesses.

8. Where the summons is for the final disposal of the suit, it shall also direct the defendant to produce, on the day fixed for his appearance, all witnesses upon whose evidence he intends to rely in support of his case.

Service of Summons.

Delivery or transmission of summons for service.

9. (1) Where the defendant resides within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is instituted, or has an agent resident within that jurisdiction who is empowered to accept the service of the summons, the summons shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, be delivered or sent to the proper officer to be served by him or one of his subordinates.

than that in which the suit is instituted, and, where he is such an officer, the summons may be sent to him by post or in such other manner as the Court may direct.

Issue of summons for service.—The awarding of process is a judicial act, but its service is ministerial. In this country a summons can be served only through the Court, and there is a complete code of rules relating to the service of summons in all cases. It has therefore been contended that parties cannot contract themselves out of the rules prescribed, and the contrary rule has not been recognized by the Courts in any case.(1) The object of the summons is to notify to the defendant that he is sued and the particulars in regard thereto. And in the under-mentioned case it was held that a decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction was not a nullity merely because of an irregularity in service, the parties being shown to be aware of the suit, which is the whole object of service.(2) The Code proceeds upon the assumption that every Court has a jurisdiction within certain limits separate and distinct from every other Court; and its provisions are applicable only to Courts possessing such a jurisdiction.(3) The Court therefore in this case held that it had not the power to execute its own decree or serve its own process out of the local limits of its jurisdiction. A special bailiff cannot be sent to execute civil process in foreign territory.(4) The effect of the words, "if the defendant resides within the jurisdiction," coupled with the corresponding words in sects. 85 and 89 of the former Code, was said to be that a summons could be served directly by an officer of the Court on a person residing outside the jurisdiction of the Court even if he were present, though it might be casually or incidentally, within the jurisdiction, but that it must in such cases be sent where he resides, even though it be known that at the time he is not there, but elsewhere. Whether such a construction would be accepted was, however, doubtful, the question not having been raised or decided. The general rule elsewhere is different, and a summons may always be served on a defendant if he is within the jurisdiction, even if he has just come there at the time of service, provided that he has done so voluntarily, and not induced to do so by fraud or false pretences of the plaintiff, or only as a witness.(5) In cases of any but the shortest stay, the point is likely to be solved by a liberal interpretation for the purposes of this section of the word "resides." It has been held that the residence under this rule is the place where a person eats, drinks and sleeps or where his family or servants eat, drink and sleep.(6) In the Mofussil the Nazir is the proper officer of the Court to whom under this section the summons is delivered for service. It is for him to return the summons to the Court as unserved, and this he does by countersigning the bailiff's endorsement.(7) No officer can serve a summons beyond the local limits of the exercise of his functions,

Service to be on defendant in person when practicable, or on his agent.

12. Wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person, unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient.

Service, personal or on an agent.—This section corresponds with sect. 49 of the Code of 1859. The summons, at a proper and reasonable time and place, should be given directly to the defendant, and not to another person for delivery to him, after the serving officer has satisfied himself of the identity of the person named in the summons with the person on whom he serves it.(1) A person who, being the ammookhtear of the male defendant, looked after the affairs of the female defendant, was held not to be an agent empowered to accept service.(2) There may be personal service on a minor.(3) See notes to r. 10, ante.

Service on agent by whom defendant carries on business.

13. (1) In a suit relating to any business or work against a person who does not reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court from which the summons is issued, service on any manager or agent, who, at the time of service, personally carries on such business or work for such person within such limits, shall be deemed good service.

(2) For the purpose of this rule the master of a ship shall be deemed to be the agent of the owner or charterer.

Agent carrying on business.—To satisfy the conditions of this rule as to service of summons on an agent, there must be a person residing without the local jurisdiction, but carrying on business or work within those limits by a manager or agent, and sued on account of such work; that is, business either actually itself carried on by the agent or manager, or forming part of the business in the sense of a connected course of transactions to the management of which he has been duly appointed.(4) This rule and O. III. r. 2, clause (b), are to be construed together, and are intended to carry out the same scheme of relief, which rests upon the idea that where an agent has been put forward substantially to take the place of his principal within a particular jurisdiction, he should take the place of such principal (at the option of any person who has dealt with him) in any legal proceedings that may arise out of the business or work in which the agent has been virtually a local principal. The manager or agent contemplated by the Code is one who has an initiative and independent discretion, albeit subject possibly to principles and general orders prescribed for his guidance. A mere servant employed to carry out orders or to execute a particular commission, or a factor or common agent who is not identified with the firm for which he acts, is not such an agent.(1) Upon the principle embodied in the rule, it was held, prior to its enactment, that service of summons on an agent to whom a ship was consigned was good service on the owner in respect of matters connected with the ship.(2) Service unduly made under this rule does not become effectual by reason of the fact of such service being subsequently notified to the parties really interested as defendants.(3) Semble —Service duly effected under this rule is effectual without reference to the circumstance of its being or not being communicated to the real defendants.(4) An opinion has been expressed that it would be anomalous to hold that, though the Code requires the appointment of a proper person as guardian to act for a minor generally in the conduct of the case, service of summons on a person other than such person may be sufficient service on the minor. The question was not decided, as the Court held that there was no service of summons under the sections corresponding with either rr. 11 or 13 of O. V., even assuming that these sections applied to a case in which some of the defendants who are interested in the partnership or business are minors.(5)

"Immoveable property."—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 61. A suit for foreclosure or sale of immoveable property is within the meaning of these words.(6)

Where service may be on male member of defendant's family.

15. Where in any suit the defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the defendant who is residing with him.

Explanation.—A servant is not a member of the family within the meaning of this rule.

"Cannot be found."—This section corresponds to sect. 53 of the Code of 1859. See notes to r. 17.

"Agent empowered."—This clause involves an essential condition of the service on the adult members of the family, which will not be good unless it is proved that there was no agent empowered to accept the service.(1)

"On any adult member," etc.—The person on whom service is made must be both adult and male. The object of this provision is that the copy shall be delivered to some person of the age of discretion who will understand for what purpose such copy is delivered, and will give it to the defendant on his coming. This is all the more necessary as there is no provision in the Code requiring the officer to inform the person with whom the copy is left of its contents, so as to impress upon him the importance of delivering it to the defendant as soon as possible. An adult member will be deemed to reside with the defendant only if the two are bonâ fide living in commensality, or at least in the same house.(2)

Person served to sign acknowledgment.

16. Where the serving officer delivers or tenders a copy of the summons to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, he shall require the signature of the person to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons.

Acknowledgment.—The serving officer under this section, which corresponds to sect. 54 of the Code of 1859, must either deliver or tender a copy of the summons and obtain an acknowledgment on the original. The mere showing of a summons is not sufficient.(3) If the party refuses the acknowledgment, then the serving officer should proceed under the next rule.(4) A mere refusal to sign a receipt or a summons is not an offence under sect. 173 or sect. 180 of the Penal Code.(5)

Procedure when defendant refuses to accept service, or cannot be found.

17. Where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the serving officer, after using all due and reasonable diligence, cannot find the defendant, and there is no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and shall then return the original to the Court from which it was issued, with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed.

Refusal to accept service.—This section, which corresponds with sect. 55 of the Code of 1859, and sect. 80 of the last Code, has been amended in several particulars. If the defendant himself or other person (that is, agent or manager, or adult male member of his family) be found, but the defendant or such person refuses to sign, then the serving officer may at once affix the summons on the dwelling-house.

It was not clear from the language of the section as it stood what results should follow when the defendant retained the copy of summons delivered but refused to sign the acknowledgment. Similarly, if the defendant refused to sign the acknowledgment, but did not "ordinarily" reside in any house, as in the case of roving traders and strolling players, no provision appeared to exist. In such a case it was considered that the refusal should operate as service and the following proviso was inserted in the draft:—"Provided that, where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, and (a) retains the copy of the summons delivered to him, or (b) no house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain can be discovered, the Court may direct that the summons shall be deemed to have been duly served." The proposal has, however, not been adopted.

"Cannot find."—But if the defendant cannot be found, then the return must show that there is no agent or other person on whom the service could be made before a service on the dwelling-house is good. The words "cannot find" constitute a condition of the mode of service provided.(1) Thus where the summons was served on the defendant's paternal uncle, who was a member of the same joint-family and lived in the same house, it was held that the service was insufficient since there was no proof that defendant could not be found.(2) It must be shown that proper efforts to find the defendant were made, as, for instance, that the serving officer went to the place or places and at the times at which it was reasonable to expect the defendant would be found.(3) "It is true that you may go to a man's house and not find him, but that is not attempting to find him; you should go to his house, make inquiries, and, if necessary, follow him. You should make inquiries to find out when he is likely to be at home, and go to the house at a time when he can be found." (4) The summons can be affixed to the dwelling-house only if the defendant could not be found after diligent search and reasonable efforts made to find him.(5) Where there was no attempt to find the defendants, and there being only one summons for a number of defendants, it was affixed to the house of one only, it was held not duly served, even on that defendant.(1) The rule has been amended to embody these rulings to the effect that the serving officer must use diligence. If, though the defendant is absent, the serving officer is told where he is, service on the house is bad; (2) the Court observing, in the last-cited case, that mere temporary absence of the person to be served does not justify the process server affixing the summons to the door. But where the serving officer has information that there is no prospect of his being able to serve the defendant personally within a reasonable time, he is not bound to wait, and will be justified in affixing the summons on the door.(3) A defendant will also be held not to be found when it is known that he is in the house, but the serving officer cannot get access to him.(4) Whether or not the conditions required by the rule are established to the satisfaction of the Court, must, of course, in each case depend on its own particular circumstances.(5) What has to be regarded in all such cases is this, that the object of the service of a summons, in whatever way it may be effected, is that the defendant may be informed of the institution of the suit in due time before the day fixed for the hearing; and when, from the return of the serving officer, it appears that there is no likelihood that the summons will come to the defendant's knowledge in due time, or a probability that it will not so come to his knowledge, it cannot be said that there has been due service.(6)

"Outer door."—The words "or some other conspicuous part" have been added, as in this country many houses have nothing which, without a stretch of language, can be described as "outer doors."

"Ordinarily resides."—As to the meaning of the term "resides," see sect. 20, ante. The intention of the provision is that the defendant should be residing in the house in such a manner as to make it probable that a knowledge of the service of summons will reach him. Thus, the service will not be good if the defendant have left the house and the village two years before.(7) The rule speaks of the house where the defendant resides. Therefore a place of business would not ordinarily come within the section,(8) though in some cases, where the defendant both resides and carries on business at the same place, it would be so. There must be evidence that the house on which the summons was affixed was that in which the defendant ordinarily resided.(9) It has been held that in this rule and rule 9 of this Order a person must be taken to reside where he or his family or servants eat, drink and sleep.(10)

"Or carries on business," etc.—These words have been added to bring this rule into closer conformity with sect. 20, the principle of which it was considered was equally applicable to the service of process.(1)

Return.—The return should specify that the copy was affixed to "the outer door (or, now, conspicuous part) of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides;" and merely to report that it has been affixed to the defendant's house is not sufficient, as the defendant may have more than one house.(2) In a subsequent case (3) the service was held good, as the serving peon deposed that the defendant was living in the house. But where the return does not say that the copy has been affixed, nor does that appear from the inquiry made under r. 19, there is no service.(4) So also the return must state that the summons was affixed to the house in which the defendant ordinarily resided at the time of the service,(5) and where the reference to the time had been omitted, the return was considered insufficient.(6) The Calcutta High Court rules provide that the return must also show that the summons was tendered to the defendant and returned, and that the defendant refused to receive the same, whereupon the serving officer informed him what the document was, and acquainted him with the nature and contents thereof.(7)

Identification.—As the practice of the Courts with regard to identifying persons or houses in connection with the service of process did not appear to be uniform, it was considered expedient to provide in the return endorsed on the summons for, at least, one identifier whom the Court or the parties could call as a witness in case of a dispute with respect to the sufficiency of service. The words "if any" were, however, inserted because it was considered that the Code should not render absolutely illegal the service of process without an identifier, where local experience justified the High Court in issuing no directions for such a safeguard.

Endorsement of time and manner of service.

18. The serving officer shall, in all cases in which the summons has been served under rule 16, endorse or annex, or cause to be endorsed or annexed, on or to the original summons, a return stating the time when and the manner in which the summons was served, and the name and address of the person (if any) identifying the person served and witnessing the delivery or tender of the summons.

Return not evidence of service.—This section corresponds to sect. 56 of the Code of 1859. The return is not legal evidence of the service.(8)

Whenever it is necessary for the Court to satisfy itself that a summons or other process has been duly served, the presiding officer should for that purpose take the evidence of the serving officer. Thus, in Raj Kishore v. Bydonath Shaha,(1) Bayley, J., observed that "there is simply a return by the Nazir to the effect that the peon swears that such a notice had been served on the defendants; but a bare return like this, without the deposition on oath of the serving peon taken before a competent authority, which the Nazir is not, is wholly insufficient in law to prove the service." The general rules of the Calcutta High Court (2) lay down that the requisite proof may be either by the affidavit or verified statement of the person by whom the service was effected, and of any person who may have accompanied the serving officer for the purpose of identifying the party to whom the process was addressed, or otherwise directing or assisting the serving officer, or, if deemed necessary, by the examination in Court as witnesses of such persons as the Court may think fit to examine. As to the added words, see notes to last rule.

Examination of serving officer.

19. Where a summons is returned under rule 17, the Court shall, if the return under that rule has not been verified by the affidavit of the serving officer, and may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving officer on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching his proceedings, and may make such further inquiry in the matter as it thinks fit; and shall either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thinks fit.

"Shall either declare."—These words show that the affixing, taken by itself, is certainly not effectual complete service. The Court has to see that the conditions precedent to such service have been fulfilled. Service is insufficient until confirmed under this rule. If the Court decides against the service, then either a new summons must be issued or substituted service directed.(3)

20. (1) Where the Court is satisfied that there is reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service, or that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way, the Court shall order the summons to be served by affixing a copy thereof in some conspicuous place in the Court-house, and also upon some conspicuous part of the house (if any) in which the defendant is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit.

Effect of substituted service.

(2) Service substituted by order of the Court shall be as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally.

Where service substituted, time for appearance to be fixed.

(3) Where service is substituted by order of the Court, the Court shall fix such time for the appearance of the defendant as the case may require.

Substituted service.—This form of service can only be had in cases in which (if there were no difficulties in the way) personal service could be had. This is based on the principle that one cannot do indirectly what cannot be done directly. So the defendant must be a person or a corporation or a firm.(1) So, as the Courts have no jurisdiction over a foreign sovereign unless he submits, he cannot be served by substitution.(2) If at the time of the issue of summons there could have been at law personal service of it upon the defendant sought to be served, then substituted service may be allowed.(3) But if personal service could not at law have been made, then, save as hereinafter mentioned, substituted service cannot be ordered.(4) Assuming that personal service at law could have been made, the grounds of fact on which service may be ordered are (a) that the defendant is keeping out of the way, or (b) that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way. In cases of substituted service, the Courts should take care to be satisfied that the conditions on which alone it is good, exist.(5) It has been already stated that, as a general rule, substituted service cannot be ordered where personal service is not legally possible; but under ground (a) it can, it has been held, be directed where the defendant was out of the jurisdiction at the time of the issue of the writ if the evidence satisfies the Court that he went out of the jurisdiction to evade service.(6) As regards ground (b), the section gives full discretion to the Court. So service has been allowed on proof that the defendant could not be found, that he had not been heard of for over two years, and that his uncle and father did not know where he was.(7)

As regards the modes of service, the section expressly mentions two, but also gives the Court a full discretion in the matter, the exercise of which must depend upon the circumstances of each case. The main principle to be always borne in mind is that the summons should, so far as be practicable, be served in such a way that it may come to the knowledge of the defendant. The Court must therefore consider what would be best form of service for this purpose. The usual modes are service on an agent, such as a solicitor or other agent, or any other person with whom the party is in communication ; (1) by advertisement and through the post ; (2) and by leaving a copy at the last known place of residence, and publication in the Court-house. If there are circumstances which go to show, at the time the order is asked for, that the summons will not reach the defendant, service should not be directed on the last known place of residence. So it was held that where service was made at a place, the last known residence of the defendant, but where he had not been for seven years, the order was bad, the Court observing that the object of the provisions of the law was to secure the process coming to the knowledge of the defendant.(3) Such a question is, however, not likely to arise where the Court is satisfied that the defendant is keeping away.

It has been held that, as a rule, the return by a competent Court that the summons has been duly served, or substituted service effected, raises a presumption in favour of service.(4) There is no provision in the Code as to a return of the substituted service showing how and when it was effected. In practice, however, the Court will assure itself of the service having been properly effected, either by affidavit or examination of the serving officer.(5) The procedure laid down in this rule has by analogy been applied to the service of notice of appeal on a respondent.(6)

Effect of substituted service.—The Court, when an application for leave to effect substituted service is made, decides as to the propriety of granting it, and if service is effected according to the order of the Court, it is, while the order remains undischarged, equivalent for all purposes to actual service.(7) The Code contains no provisions whereby the propriety and regularity of the order may be directly attacked by a motion to set it aside.(8)

But where judgment is obtained, the defendant may show, with a view to set it aside under O. IX. r. 13, either that the summons was not duly served—that is, that the order for substituted service (whatever may have been its propriety) has not been carried out—or that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing. A summons served under this rule, if served in compliance with the directions of the Court, is duly served, even though it does not in fact come to the knowledge of the defendant. But the time and place of the defendant acquiring knowledge is material in determining whether he could attend on the day fixed in the summons, and may furnish a sufficient ground for non-attendance on that day. "Effectual" thus means merely effectual for proceeding with the suit, and nothing more. It does not, for instance, mean that substituted service on a man's house in Bombay is equivalent to personal service on that date; nor does it imply the consequence that a man who happened to be in Central India had personal knowledge of what was done at his house in Bombay on the day substituted service was effected.(1) The Court in the last case set aside an ex parte decree upon its being shown that the defendant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing. In an earlier case (2) the Court refused to do so. Though the question whether the defendant was prevented from attending was not expressly alluded to, the Court, however, appears to have based its judgment on the facts proved, which went to show that the defendant had in fact notice in sufficient time and therefore could have attended.

Time for appearance.—Where substituted service of the summons is ordered sufficient time ought, under this rule, to be given for notice of the fact to reach the defendant, wherever he may be; and if an ex parte decree be obtained by the plaintiff, the Court, on being satisfied that the time fixed was insufficient, will set aside the decree.(3)

Duty of Court to which summons is sent.

23. The Court to which a summons is sent under rule 21 or rule 22 shall, upon receipt thereof, proceed as if it had been issued by such Court and shall then return the summons to the Court of issue, together with the record (if any) of its proceedings with regard thereto.

Court to which process must be sent.—See sect. 59 of Code of 1859. R. 21 shortens the earlier portion of sect. 85 of the last Code, the second clause of which is r. 23. R. 22 is sect. 86. The summons, it was ruled, should ordinarily be sent, not to the Judge of the district where it has to be served, but to the Court having jurisdiction at the place where the defendant resides, by which it can be conveniently served—that is, to the Munsif within whose jurisdiction the defendant resides.(1) But the Calcutta High Court summons used to be sent to the District Court for service through the local Court by direction of the District Judge, and the same rule applies in the Panjab Chief Court.(2) For forms of process, see Schedule I., Appendix B. R. 21 says to any Court "not being a High Court." Should, however, the summons be sent in contravention of this rule, the High Court might either return it or order the proper local Court to effect service. This will, however, not be done for a foreign Court. When suits are instituted in England against persons resident in India, the assistance of the Courts here is not invoked. The English Court, through the plaintiff's solicitor, sends the writ to a solicitor in India with instructions to serve and to return writ with an affidavit of service. So the Calcutta High Court refused to serve a summons sent to it by a Court in the Nizam of Hyderabad's territories, advising that it should be sent to a pleader practising in the district where the defendant resided.(3) The summons is to be returned together with the record, which will include the Nazir's return, affidavits, statements, and depositions of the serving officer and of the witnesses relative to the facts of service. As to the necessity of a declaration of sufficiency of service, vide ante.

Presumption as to validity of service.—According to the opinion of Scott, J., if the return primâ facie shows that service has been duly effected, the presumption in favour of the correctness of the proceedings of the Courts will prevail; and the Court sending the summons is not bound in every case to satisfy itself that the law as to service has been strictly followed. The Court serving the summons alone can judge how in any particular case service should be effected, and whether it has been properly effected; and it does not appear to have been intended by the Legislature that the transmitting Court should act as a revising Court as regards the service. In fact, it would only lead to great inconvenience and delay, without effecting any real good, for that Court to discuss the discretion of the Court serving the summons as to what facts are sufficient to justify the waiver of personal service on the defendant, and the substitution of an affixing of the summons on his dwelling-house, or the adoption of other mode of substituted service. For instance, where a Court has returned a summons as duly served, and the return states that the summons has been posted on the defendant's dwelling-house, because the defendant has gone elsewhere, it ought to be presumed that this service was justified by the facts, and that the Court duly acted under the provisions of sects. 80 and 82 read together (now rr. 17, 19). But, at the same time, the presumption in favour of the due execution of acts of a judicial nature only obtains donec probetur in contrarium, and there may now and then occur cases where there is something in the return distinctly negativing that presumption, and showing illegality in the mode of service.(1) Probably, however, the true rule is that the transmitting Court may accept but is not bound by the return, the section not requiring any declaration touching the sufficiency of the service.(2) In this view it devolves upon the transmitting Court to determine upon the sufficiency of the service before trying the suit, raising or not raising the presumption according to the circumstances. The practice of the Calcutta High Court has always been to determine for itself whether the service is sufficient, having regard to the numerous irregularities which exist in "Mofussil service." But the Allahabad High Court has held that usually the decision whether such summons has been properly served or not rests with the serving Court, not with the issuing Court.(3)

Defendant in jail.—A suitor ought obviously not to be deprived of his remedy by the fact that the defendant is in jail.(4) The former section (as to which, see sect. 15, Act XV. of 1869) was originally enacted to meet the difficulty felt in the last-mentioned case. Wilson, J., is reported to have held that the endorsement under sect. 87 of the last Code ranked higher than a nazir's return, and was evidence of the service of summons.(5) The amended section contains no provision as regards the return of service, which is dealt with by r. 29, under which the return is evidence of due service.

25. Where the defendant resides out of British India and has no agent in British India empowered to accept service, the summons shall be addressed to the defendant at the place where he is residing and sent to him by post, if there is postal communication between such place and the place where the Court is situate.

Service where defendant resides out of British India and has no agent.

"Resides out of British India."—In such cases the mode of service is necessarily of a private character, as it is a general rule that a Court has no authority to send its process for execution out of the territorial limits of the State. So a bailiff cannot be sent to foreign territory to himself serve the summons on the defendant there.(1) This rule, which corresponds with sect. 60 of the Code of 1859, must be read with the next.

"Sent"; "Forwarded."—The section in the last Code required that the summons should be "forwarded" to the defendant, which was held to mean that the summons must reach him.(2) This, therefore, did not mean merely put into the post.(3) and there had to be proof of facts from which the Court might reasonably conclude that the summons had reached the defendant.(4) In some cases it would amount to a denial of justice to require direct proof of receipt or refusal. When proof of posting in due course has been given, a presumption may be raised under sects. 16 and 114 of the Evidence Act. This would appear to be the case now. The word "sent" has been substituted. But there ought to be evidence that he is, or has been recently, residing at the place to which the summons has been sent, or that the acknowledgment is in the writing of the defendant.(5) In practice the summons is sent under registered cover, both to ensure service as well as to procure good evidence of it.(6) If a registered cover is refused, the person so refusing cannot take advantage of his refusal and plead ignorance of its contents.(7)

the summons may be sent to such Political Agent or Court, by post or otherwise, for the purpose of being served upon the defendant; and, if the Political Agent or Court returns the summons with an endorsement signed by such Political Agent or by the Judge or other officer of the Court that the summons has been served on the defendant in manner hereinbefore directed, such endorsement shall be deemed to be evidence of service.

Summons outside India.—This section replaces sect. 90 of the last Code, which was itself substituted for the original by the Amendment Act (VII of 1888), sect. 12, and is intended chiefly for Indian Native States. This section does not apply to British or other territories, not under or connected with the Indian Government - such as Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, and even Great Britain, and, à fortiori, not to countries like China and Persia, where there is a British Envoy or Ambassador or Consul, as distinguished from a Political Agent; nor to Afghanistan. The general direction contained in r. 25 would apply in all such cases. Summonses issued for service on persons residing in British possessions out of British India, and in other countries to which this rule does not apply, should be addressed to the defendant at the place where he is residing, and sent by post in accordance with that section.(1) The distinction between the cases in which this rule applies and in which it does not apply is to be preserved, as the agency of the post-office under r. 25 should not be used for the service of a summons except when specially prescribed; for when any other mode for serving a notice is prescribed, a service through the post has not been deemed sufficient, even though actual delivery of the notice by the post peon is proved.(2)

Endorsement is evidence.—Unlike the ordinary return, the endorsement under the signature of Political Agent, Judge, or other officer is evidence of the service of the summons; but it is no longer, as under the section prior to its amendment in 1888, conclusive evidence, and the defendant may

"Sent."—In the under-mentioned case (1) it was held that the Subordinate Judge should have sent the summons himself, instead of through the Court of the District Judge.

Service on civil public officer or on servant of railway company or local authority.

27. Where the defendant is a public officer (not belonging to His Majesty's military or naval forces or His Majesty's Indian Marine Service), or is the servant of a railway company or local authority, the Court may, if it appears to it that the summons may be most conveniently so served, send it for service on the defendant to the head of the office in which he is employed, together with a copy to be retained by the defendant.

Service on public officers.—The exigencies of public service demand that both civil and military officers should not be summoned without proper notice to their superiors. This concession, however, coupled with the privileges given in connection with attachment, casts upon the Government a corresponding duty to provide commensurate facilities for service. This section, which replaces sect. 422, extends its provisions, which had hitherto applied to public officers only, to railway servants or servants of local authorities. Military officers are dealt with in the next section. If the summons is not sent to the head of the office it must be served in the usual way. The Government pleader is not the agent of every public officer, as he is of Government, to accept service. As to the duty of the Head of the office, service, and return, see r. 29, post.

Service of soldiers.

28. Where the defendant is a soldier, the Court shall send the summons for service to his commanding officer together with a copy to be retained by the defendant.

Soldiers.—The words "an officer or" formerly occurring in sect. 468 of the last Code before the words "a soldier" were repealed by the Cantonments Act (XIII. of 1889). Military officers, therefore, since that Act ceased to be governed by sect. 468, the provisions of which are embodied in this section so far as they relate to soldiers. Owing to the varied conditions of service of military officers, it has been thought expedient to follow the terms of the Cantonment Act in leaving the matter to be regulated by Rules.

29. (1) Where a summons is delivered or sent to any person for service under rule 24, rule 27 or rule 28, such person shall be bound to serve it, if possible, and to return it under his signature, with the written acknowledgment of the defendant, and such signature shall be deemed to be evidence of service.

Duty of person to whom summons is delivered or sent for service.

(2) Where from any cause service is impossible, the summons shall be returned to the Court with a full statement of such cause and of the steps taken to procure service, and such statement shall be deemed to be evidence of non-service.

Service.—With a general application so much of sect. 468 of the last Code has been retained as compels the officer addressed by the Court to execute the process.(1) Special provision has been made on the lines of sect. 72 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, for treating a return in such a case as evidence though unsupported by affidavit.(2) It has also been considered desirable to declare such a return to be evidence of non-service also, so as to avoid the necessity for summoning public officers where, as not infrequently occurs, an ex parte decree has been passed by inadvertence and is assailed by an application under O. IX. r. 13.

30. (1) The Court may, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, substitute for a summons a letter signed by the Judge or such officer as he may appoint in this behalf, where the defendant is, in the opinion of the Court, of a rank entitling him to such mark of consideration.

Substitution of letter for summons.

(2) A letter substituted under sub-rule (1) shall contain all the particulars required to be stated in a summons, and, subject to the provisions of sub-rule (3), shall be treated in all respects as a summons.

(3) A letter so substituted may be sent to the defendant by post or by a special messenger selected by the Court, or in any other manner which the Court thinks fit; and, where the defendant has an agent empowered to accept service, the letter may be delivered or sent to such agent.

Messenger.—This section corresponds to sects. 64 and 65 of the Code of 1859. It was held in connection with sect. 60 of that Code, corresponding to r. 25 of the present one, that as no officer of a Court could execute process without its jurisdiction, a special bailiff could not be sent to serve process in foreign territory.(1)

ORDER VI.

Pleadings generally.

Pleading.

1. "Pleading" shall mean plaint or written statement.

Pleading to state material facts and not evidence.

2. Every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved, and shall, when necessary, be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively. Dates, sums and numbers shall be expressed in figures.

Forms of pleading.

3. The forms in Appendix A when applicable, and where they are not applicable, forms of the like character, as nearly as may be, shall be used for all pleadings.

Particulars to be given where necessary.

4. In all cases in which the party pleading relies on any misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default, or undue influence, and in all other cases in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms aforesaid, particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleading.

Further and better statement, or particulars.

5. A further and better statement of the nature of the claim or defence, or further and better particulars of any matter stated in any pleading, may in all cases be ordered, upon such terms, as to costs and otherwise, as may be just.

Condition precedent.

6. Any condition precedent, the performance or occurrence of which is intended to be contested, shall be distinctly specified in his pleading by the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be; and, subject thereto, an averment of the performance or occurrence of all conditions precedent necessary for the case of the plaintiff or defendant shall be implied in his pleading.

Departure.

7. No pleading shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same.

Denial of contract.

8. Where a contract is alleged in any pleading, a bare denial of the same by the opposite party shall be construed only as a denial in fact of the express contract alleged or of the matters of fact from which the same may be implied, and not as a denial of the legality or sufficiency in law of such contract.

Effect of document to be stated.

9. Wherever the contents of any document are material, it shall be sufficient in any pleading to state the effect thereof as briefly as possible, without setting out the whole or any part thereof, unless the precise words of the document or any part thereof are material.

Malice, knowledge, etc.

10. Wherever it is material to allege malice, fraudulent intention, knowledge or other condition of the mind of any person, it shall be sufficient to allege the same as a fact without setting out the circumstances from which the same is to be inferred.

Notice.

11. Wherever it is material to allege notice to any person of any fact, matter or thing, it shall be sufficient to allege such notice as a fact, unless the form or the precise terms of such notice, or the circumstances from which such notice is to be inferred, are material.

Implied contract, or relation.

12. Whenever any contract or any relation between any persons is to be implied from a series of letters or conversations or otherwise from a number of circumstances, it shall be sufficient to allege such contract or relation as a fact, and to refer generally to such letters, conversations or circumstances without setting them out in detail. And if in such case the person so pleading desires to rely in the alternative upon more contracts or relations than one as to be implied from such circumstances, he may state the same in the alternative.

13. Neither party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon the other side unless the same has first been specifically denied, (e.g., consideration for a bill of exchange where the plaintiff sues only on the bill, and not for the consideration as a substantive ground of claim).

Presumptions of law.

Pleadings.—Rules 1–13, 16–18 of this Order are new, and rules 2–13 and 16 are taken from the English O. 19, rr. 4–7, 14, 16, 20–25, 27, respectively. Rules 14 and 15 represent sects. 51 and 52 of the last Code. Rule 17 is taken from O. 28, r. 1 of the English rules, and would appear to hold the place of sect. 53 of the last Code after clause (a) of that section, which is now embodied in O. VII. r. 11 of this Code. Rule 18 is taken from O. 28, r. 7 of the English rules, and would appear to replace sect. 54 (d) of the last Code. Other rules from the English O. 19 are to be found in O. VIII., post. As regards this Order, the Special Committee stated, "In our opinion it is most necessary that litigants in this country should come to trial with all issues clearly defined, and that cases should not be expanded or grounds shifted without reference to the true facts. For this purpose we think that the present system of pleadings in the Mofussil, which is notoriously lax, should be improved, and we have incorporated in the rules an order on pleadings which it is hoped will lead to sounder and fairer methods of arriving at the real points in dispute. The forms have been revised, and we hope that they will be brought into more general use in the Mofussil. The Committee have added a few rules relating to pleadings based upon the system of pleading introduced by the Judicature Acts in England, which is generally admitted to be the best form of pleading in civil suits. In this country, outside the Presidency towns, the pleadings are seldom artistically drawn. They are neither concise nor precise, but contain vague and general statements from which it is difficult to ascertain definitely the real question in controversy between the parties. The sole object of pleadings is thus frequently defeated; the issue is enlarged; the trial is delayed and much unnecessary expense incurred by the parties, who are also liable to be taken by surprise. They have further provided that the forms in the Schedule shall, when applicable, be used for all pleadings, and when they are not applicable, forms of the like character shall be used. The rules prescribed will not prevent the pleader from exercising his discretion; for the amount of detail must necessarily vary with the nature of each suit. It is, however, made clear that these must be particularly sufficient to apprise the Court and the other party of the exact nature of the questions to be tried. The Committee have also given a party who considers that his opponent's pleading does not give him the information to which he is entitled the right to apply for further particulars so as to enable him to know what case he has to meet at the trial. They have, however, endeavoured to modify the rigour of the rules by providing in accordance with sect. 55 of the Indian Evidence Act that the Court may, notwithstanding the absence of any specific denial, require any fact to be proved by the party who relies upon it."

The subject of pleading will be found further discussed in the notes to O. VII. rr. 1-6, but some observations summarized from the English "Annual Practice" may be here made.

Rules 2 and 3.—The point of rules 2 and 3 is that pleadings are now mere statements of facts not law, of material facts only, and of facts which are not evidence stated in a summary way after, as nearly as possible, the forms of pleading given in the Schedules. The written statement must be as brief as possible, but should contain a full and true narrative (1) framed with care, so as to dispense with undue statements at the settlement of issues,(2) and should be confined to relevant facts; (3) anything in the nature of argument (4) or evidence or conclusions of law to be drawn from the facts pleaded being inadmissible.(5) The whole object of pleading is that the parties and the Court should know what is the real point to be discussed and decided,(6) and it should be framed with reference to this object.

Rules 4 and 5.—Rules 4 and 5 deal with particularity. In every pleading a certain amount of detail is necessary to ensure clearness and to prevent the other party from being taken by surprise. Pleadings are of no use unless they define clearly the questions at issue between the parties; and for this purpose each party must state his case with precision; otherwise the issue would be "enlarged," as it is called, and neither party would know for certain what was the real point to be discussed and assured at the trial, and therefore would not be able to properly prepare his evidence for it. No precise rule can, however, be laid down as to the decree of particularity which is required. As rule 4 directs the statement of particulars, so rule 5 provides a remedy in case the imperative language of the former rule is overlooked or disobeyed. If the allegations contained in any pleading are too vague, the proper course is to apply by notice and ask for fuller particulars. Each party is entitled to obtain a fair outline of his opponent's case, but cannot compel him to disclose the evidence by which he will attempt to establish that case. Nor will the Court sanction any attempt to deliver interrogatories under the guise of seeking particulars. The object of particulars is to enable the party asking for them to know what case he has to meet at the trial, and so to save unnecessary expense and avoid allowing parties being taken by surprise. On such an application the notice or summons should ask that if the particulars ordered be not delivered within the time prescribed, the allegations complained of be struck out, or that the party in fault be precluded from giving any evidence in support of it at the trial. The words "upon such terms" in the English rule corresponding to rule 5 have been held to authorize an order that if proper particulars be not delivered within a certain time the action shall stand dismissed or be stayed.(1) Leave may be given to amend or to add to particulars given.

Rule 6.—Cases constantly occur in which, although everything has happened which would at common law primâ facie entitle a man to a certain sum of money, or vest in him a certain right of action, there is yet something more which must be done, or something more which must happen, in the particular case, before he is entitled to sue, either by reason of the provisions of some Statute, or because the parties have expressly so agreed; this something more is called a condition precedent. It is not of the essence of such a cause of action, but it has been made essential. It is an additional formality superimposed on Common Law. Hence, in England the plaintiff could draft a perfectly good statement of claim without making any reference to the condition precedent. But this, till 1875, he was not allowed to do. In former days the plaintiff was required to set out in his declaration every condition precedent, and to aver the due performance of it with all particularity. Then came the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852; sect. 57 of which provided: "It shall be lawful for the plaintiff or defendant in any action to aver performance of conditions precedent generally, and the opposite party shall not deny such averment generally, but shall specify in his pleading the condition or conditions precedent, the performance of which he intends to contest." And now (O. 19, r. 14 of the English rules) the plaintiff need say nothing about any condition precedent which has been performed. This provision is reproduced in rule 6 of this Order. A general averment of the due performance of all conditions precedent is implied in every pleading; i.e. it need not be alleged. It is for the defendant, if he contends that there was a condition precedent and that it has not been duly performed, to state specifically what that condition was, and to plead its non-performance: otherwise its due performance will be presumed. And it is not sufficient for him to allege generally that "an express condition" had been agreed to: he must state its terms, and between whom it was made, and whether verbally or in writing. Nevertheless, when a condition precedent is properly pleaded, the burden of proving its due performance or the waiver of its due performance still rests on the plaintiff.

But it is to be noted that an allegation which is of the essence of the cause of action is not a condition precedent within the meaning of this rule, and must still be pleaded in the plaint. Thus the Law Merchant requires that notice of dishonour be given to every person who is sought to be made liable on a negotiable instrument, except the acceptor. Unless such notice was duly given, or was waived or excused, no action lies against the drawer or any indorsee. Hence the plaint must contain either an allegation that notice of dishonour was given to the defendant, or a statement of the facts relied on as excusing the giving of such notice.

Rule 7.—The meaning of rule 7 is that a party's second pleading must not contradict his first. Thus, to illustrate from English practice, if a plaintiff claims rent on his writ, he cannot claim the same sum in his reply as damages for unlawfully "holding over." Or, if the statement of claims alleges merely a negligent breach of trust, the reply must not assert that such breach of trust was fraudulent. Such inconsistent claims should be pleaded, if at all, alternatively in the statement of claim.

Rule 8.—Rule 8 is really a special application of the general principle laid down in rule 2 of O. VIII., post. If the defendant wishes to contend that any contract on which the plaintiff relies is invalid he must do something more than merely deny the agreement; he must plead specially by way of confession and avoidance the matters of fact which rendered it invalid. A traverse merely denies that the contract was in fact made: it leaves unquestioned its sufficiency in law.

Rule 9.—It may be noted, with reference to rule 9, that in an action of libel the precise words of the document are material. So in some cases the precise words of a will may be material.

Rules 10–12.—Rule 10 and the two following rules are special applications of the general principle laid down in rule 2 of this Order (which is indeed the fundamental rule of the present English system of pleading), that "every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement of the material facts on which the party pleading relies, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved."

14. Every pleading shall be signed by the party and his pleader (if any): Provided that where a party pleading is, by reason of absence or for other good cause, unable to sign the pleading, it may be signed by any person duly authorized by him to sign the same or to sue or defend on his behalf.

Pleading to be signed.

15. (1) Save as otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, every pleading shall be verified at the foot by the party or by one of the parties pleading or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case.

Verification of pleadings.

(2) The person verifying shall specify, by reference to the numbered paragraphs of the pleading, what he verifies of his own knowledge and what he verifies upon information received and believed to be true.

(3) The verification shall be signed by the person making it and shall state the date on which and the place at which it was signed.

Subscription.—These rules deal with all pleadings. Sects. 51 and 52 of the last Code dealt with plaints and sect. 115 with written statements. The object of the signature to the plaint is to prevent, as far as possible, disputes as to whether the suit was instituted with the plaintiff's knowledge and authority.(1) The rule requires that the plaint (as well as written statement) should be subscribed by the party and his pleader, if any. But this requirement as to subscription is governed by O. III. r. 1. The act of signature cannot be done by the pleader instead of the plaintiff, because the Code requires both signatures; but it permits acts to be done by a recognized agent. Reading, therefore, this section with O. III. r. 1, a personal subscription is not imperative in all cases, and a plaint which may be presented by an authorized agent may in like manner be subscribed by him, and such a subscription is a compliance with the rule.(2) Where the plaintiffs described themselves as lately carrying on business under the name of "C. & Co.," it was held that there was no irregularity in its being signed "C. & Co." (3) It is not possible to set down categorically what is good cause (4) within the meaning of the proviso. A person holding a general power of attorney containing inter alia powers to sue and defend suits, but not containing a special power to sign a plaint, was held to be a person duly authorized within the meaning of the proviso of this section in the last Code, in which the words were "duly authorized by him in this behalf," that is, to sign. Now the signature may be that of any one authorized either to sign or to sue or defend.(5) The signature of a plaint by an unauthorized agent, who subsequently becomes empowered to sign, is sufficient.(6) Under the last Code if a plaint was not signed and verified as required, it might have been returned for amendment (7) and rejected if not amended.(8) Presumably there is nothing to prevent this being done now.

The mere fact that the plaint in a suit has not been signed by the plaintiff named therein, or by any person duly authorized by him as required by this rule, will not necessarily make the plaint absolutely void. A defect in the signature of the plaint, or the absence of signature where it appears that the suit was in fact filed with the knowledge and by the authority of the plaintiff named therein, may be waived by the defendant, or, if necessary, cured by amendment at any stage of the suit, and having regard to sect. 99, ante, is not a ground for interference in appeal.(9)

Verification.—The object of the verification of the plaint is to fix upon the plaintiff the responsibility for the statements which it contains, and to affirm a guarantee of his good faith.(10) In other words, if he will not swear that he believes his cause to be just, the law does not care to bother itself with it. But when the adversary comes in, such verification is of no moment. It is not even evidence. The justice of the cause must then be proved by competent evidence. Like any other formal matter, its absence is waived by a failure to object. And if its entire absence does not affect the jurisdiction, of course mere defects in it cannot.(1). It would be difficult to imagine any case in which a defective verification could affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.(2) Under the last Code where a plaint was not verified, or improperly verified, it was returned for amendment, and, if not amended, rejected. The suit should not, it was held, be dismissed (3) (vide ante). There is no rule that a person named as a co-plaintiff is not to be treated as a plaintiff unless he signs and verifies the plaint.(4) As the object of verification is to secure good faith, and its effect to make the statements in the plaint the plaintiff's own, the Courts are bound to see that plaints are properly verified.(5) The verification may be by some other person if the latter is acquainted with the facts. The permission to a person to verify on behalf of the plaintiff should be given in each case individually, and not generally.(6) When verification by an agent is once expressly allowed, the Court is not competent afterwards to raise an objection to it.(7) But the plaintiff may himself be required to subscribe and verify,(8) as where a plaintiff charges fraud on facts known to him.(9) It was held that the verification should be by all the plaintiffs, but that the Court might allow one of them to verify; a co-plaintiff coming within the meaning of the words "some other person," etc. (10) The amended section now provides for verification by one of the plaintiffs or defendants. This rule does not apply to the case of corporations, which is provided for by O. XXIX. r. 1, post.(11) As to the Administrator-General, see below.(12) In case of a person holding a general power of attorney, or of any other recognized agent, the Court will probably not insist on any extreme stringency of proof as to his acquaintance with the facts of the case.(13) A fortiori will this be so in the case of a co-partner or other co-plaintiff. It has been said, that notice of the application for permission to verify should be given to the opposite side; but it is not necessary,(1) and is certainly not required.(2) The substantial portion of the plaint, consisting of the statement of the claim of the plaintiffs and the prayer, was written upon two sheets of plain paper and verified by the plaintiffs. Subsequently to the affixing of the plaintiffs' signatures a front sheet, consisting of a piece of stamped paper with the name of the Court and the names and addresses of the parties, was added, and the plaint thus composed filed in Court. Held, that the verification was defective, but that the suit ought not to have been dismissed. The plaintiffs ought to have been allowed an opportunity of amending the plaint by making a proper verification.(3) The rule does not require the verification of a plaint to be made in the presence of an officer of the Court; but, having regard to the necessity of satisfying the Court that the person, other than the plaintiff, who verifies the plaint is acquainted with the facts of the case, it has, in one case, been said to be desirable that a verification by such a person should be made in the presence of the Court, unless the Court be satisfied that there is sufficient ground for dispensing with his attendance.(4) Persons exempted from attendance are not exempted from signature or verification except the Court allows it for good cause, and then the party verifying should be one proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case.(5) When an application is made for verification by an attorney, it has been said to be desirable, though not necessary, that notice should be given to the other side.(6) If a written statement is admitted on the record without verification, the allegations contained in it should be noticed and issues framed accordingly.(7)

Objections to verification.—Objections to verification should be taken before the settlement of issues; after that, the case should be disposed of on the merits and not dismissed for insufficient verification.(8)

Mode of verification.—It was held under the last Code that in all cases, whether the plaint is verified by the plaintiff or by some other person, the person verifying should state shortly what paragraphs he verifies of his own knowledge, and what paragraphs he believes to be true from the information of others.(9) In the first Allahabad case cited, a verification in the words "to the limit (or extent) of my knowledge the purport of this is true," was held to be bad; and the Court observed that "the verification must be, if all the facts are to the knowledge of the deponent, a distinct verification that they are to his knowledge true;" and that "if he has knowledge as to some, and only information and belief as to others, the verification should show as to which he speaks from his knowledge and as to which he speaks from his information and belief." In the last Allahabad case cited, the verification was in the following form: "The contents of the petition of plaint are true to the best of my knowledge and belief," and a Full Bench of the Court held, that although the verification was not in strict compliance with the Code, it substantially complied with it. A failure to distinguish in the pleading between the facts stated on personal knowledge and those stated on information and belief, must of necessity defeat to a great extent the object to be attained by verification, unless the person verifying is held to have made every allegation upon personal knowledge. The rule has now been amended in accordance with these rulings and governs all pleadings. A verification to the effect that the contents of the plaint are substantially true is not sufficient,(1) as it contains a qualification which is a material departure from the requirements of the Code.(2) If an attorney, having obtained leave of the Court for that purpose, means to verify the plaint himself, he should sign the verification on his own account, and not as the plaintiff's attorney; but if he means to sign the verification merely as the plaintiff's attorney, the plaintiff himself ought to see the plaint and verification, and authorize the attorney to sign the verification for him.(3) The General Rules of the North-Western Provinces (4) and Calcutta High Courts,(5) provide that all verifications "shall correctly specify the date and place at which they are signed." This rule has now been embodied in the third clause.

Course to be taken when verification defective.—If the verification of a plaint is discovered to be defective at any time whilst the suit is before the Court of first instance, the plaint may be amended by the Court.(6) If such defect be not discovered until the suit comes on appeal before an Appellate Court, such Court may, if it thinks fit, return the plaint to the Court of first instance to be amended by it. But where the defect is such that it is covered by the provisions of sect. 99, ante, there is no necessity for the Appellate Court to take any steps to procure the amendment of the plaint. In any event a defect in the verification of a plaint will not of necessity result in the dismissal of the suit,(7) or in its being decreed.(8)

Striking out pleadings.

16. The Court may at any stage of the proceedings order to be struck out or amended any matter in any pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit.

language is wide, but its operation has in England been to some extent limited by the decisions given on it. Although the rule expressly states that the order may be made "at any stage of the proceedings," still the application should always be made promptly, and as a rule before the close of the pleadings; or the Court may, in its discretion, decline to exercise its jurisdiction.(1) "The rule that the Court is not to dictate to parties how they should frame their cases, is one that ought always to be preserved sacred. But that rule is, of course, subject to this modification and limitation, that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleading which have been laid down by the law; and, if a party introduces a pleading which is unnecessary, and it tends to prejudice, embarrass, and delay the trial of the action, it then becomes a pleading which is beyond his right." (2) A reasonable latitude must be given.(3) Not every pleading which offends against the rules will be struck out. The applicant must show that he is in some way prejudiced by the irregularity. Still, "the defendant may claim ex debito justitiæ to have the plaintiff's case presented in an intelligible form, so that he may not be embarrassed in meeting it." (4)

"Unnecessary."—The word "unnecessary" was introduced into the English Rule in 1883. But the mere fact that an opponent's pleading contains some unnecessary matter is not sufficient ground for an application under this rule. A statement will not be struck out merely because it is unnecessary, so long as it is otherwise harmless.(5) It is no part of the defendant's duty to reform the plaintiff's pleading, or to dictate to him how he shall plead, or vice versâ. But if wholly immaterial matter be set out in such a way that the applicant must plead to it, and so raise irrelevant issues which may involve expense, trouble and delay, then the irrelevant matter will be struck out, as it will prejudice the fair trial of the action.

"Scandalous."—As regards "scandalous" matter, the Court has a general jurisdiction to expunge it in any record or proceeding,(6) and apparently, according to the English practice, any person may make the application.(7) Allegations of dishonesty and outrageous conduct, etc., are not, however, scandalous, if relevant to the issue.(8) "Nothing can be scandalous which is relevant." (1) "The mere fact that these paragraphs state a scandalous fact does not make them scandalous." (2) But if degrading charges be made which are irrelevant, or if, though the charge be relevant, unnecessary details are given, the pleading becomes scandalous.(3) The sole question is whether the matter alleged to be scandalous would be admissible in evidence to show the truth of any allegation in the pleading which is material with reference to the relief prayed.(4)

"Tend to prejudice, etc."—The Court is "disposed to give a liberal interpretation" to the words "Tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit." (5) At the same time parties must not be too ready to find themselves embarrassed. If the defendant does not make it clear how much of the plaint he admits and how much he denies, his pleading is embarrassing.(6) If he does not make it clear whether he is traversing the allegations contained in the plaint, or objecting to them on a point of law, his defence will be struck out as embarrassing.(7) In neither case could the plaintiff safely join issue. So a plea of justification is embarrassing if it leaves the plaintiff in doubt what the defendant has justified and what he has not.(8) But mere prolixity is not embarrassing.(9) Nor will a statement be struck out as embarrassing merely because the other party declares that it is untrue.(10) The mere fact that a Statement of Claim embraces several causes of action is not, according to English practice, embarrassing, if they are distinctly pleaded in the alternative. A claim for alternative relief is not embarrassing.(11) So any number of inconsistent defences may now, in England, be pleaded to the same cause of action; and their inconsistency is not "embarrassing" to the pleader.(12)

But if a claim against executors personally in their private capacity be improperly joined with a claim against the estate of their testator, it will be struck out.(13) So where several plaintiffs or several defendants are improperly joined in one action, though the causes of action be separate, the pleading will be struck out.(14) Where a pleading is defective only in the sense that it does not contain particulars which it ought to contain, and thus deprives the opponent of information to which he is entitled, it is not "embarrassing" in the strict sense of the word (though that epithet is often applied to such a pleading),(1) and application should now be made for "a further and better statement of the nature of the claim or defence" under r. 5, and not for an order to strike out the pleading under this rule.

Amendment of pleadings.

17. The Court may at any stage of the proceedings allow either party to alter or amend his pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties.

Failure to amend after order.

18. If a party who has obtained an order for leave to amend does not amend accordingly within the time limited for that purpose by the order, or if no time is thereby limited then within fourteen days from the date of the order, he shall not be permitted to amend after the expiration of such limited time as aforesaid or of such fourteen days, as the case may be, unless the time is extended by the Court.

Former and present provisions.—The present rules are in very much more general terms than sect. 53 of the last Code which they replace. Clause (a) of that section dealt with rejection of the plaint for want of cause of action. This provision has now been referred to O. VII. r. 11. Clause (b) dealt with return for amendment under certain circumstances which are expressly stated, (i), (ii), (iii), and (iv), as to which, see post. This return was before the settlement of issues. Clause (c) dealt with amendment by the Court at any time before judgment. The section also contained the important qualification that no plaint should be amended either by the Court or by the party so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. Before pointing out the extended scope of the present Code, and for the better understanding of it, a detailed examination of the former provisions is given.

Return for amendment by Court of First Instance under former Code.—A plaintiff (2) might himself apply, at or before settlement of issues, that the plaint which he had filed be returned to him for amendment if he perceived that it was defective formally, or required amendment as regards substance or relief. An application was generally, though not of necessity, made on petition (3) supported by an affidavit (4) showing the grounds on which it was made. It is submitted also that notice should have been given, though it has been held that if a party has notice of the suit but does not appear, the fact that the plaint was under such circumstances amended without notice to him did not nullify the decree thereafter made.(1) A defendant (2) might similarly apply. If neither party applied, the Court might, under clause (b), of its own motion in the specific cases therein mentioned, return the plaint to the party to be amended by him so as to remove the particular objections which might exist to it. The party himself then amended his plaint. But under clause (b) the plaintiff need not have amended at all after the plaint was returned to him, but if he did not he incurred the penalty of sect. 54.(3) The Original Court could not, unless acting under the orders of an Appellate Court, return a plaint after settlement of issues, for after that period the power to amend was with the Court alone; (4) but if the plaint required amendment and the fact was only discovered after issues had been settled, the Court could amend the plaint at any time before judgment.(5) It was apparently not intended by the Legislature that any necessary amendment should take any form other than that of an amendment in writing on the face of the plaint; and the Court was not competent to order an amendment so as to require that a plan should be appended to the plaint.(6) Straight, J., incidentally expressed an opinion that a plaint, after being once returned for amendment and amended accordingly, could not be returned again for amendment.(7) In cases in which leave under the Charter had to be obtained prior to the institution of the suit, no such amendment could be allowed as would introduce a new cause of action, for the grant of leave must be taken to relate to the suit as put forward in the plaint on which leave is endorsed by the Judge accepting it.(8) When a plaint was returned a time had to be fixed within which the amendment must be made.(9) The Court, however, had a discretion to extend even after the time originally fixed for amendment had expired.(10) If the plaint was not amended within the time fixed it was rejected under sect. 54 (d).

settlement of issues the plaint should have been returned for amendment, and if the verification was discovered to be defective at any time whilst the suit was before the Court of first instance, the plaint might be amended by the Court. If such defect was not discovered until the suit came in appeal before an Appellate Court, such Court might, if it thought fit, return the plaint to the Court of first instance to be amended by it. But where the defect was such that it was covered by the provisions of sect. 578 of that Code, there was no necessity to take any steps to procure the amendment of the plaint.(1) The Allahabad High Court has in some cases remanded the case under sect. 562 of the former Code with an order for the return of the plaint to the plaintiff for duly signing and verifying the same.(2)

Clause (ii) of sect. 53 of former Code.—See as regards clause (ii), O. VII. rr. 1–6, ante. The general intention and meaning of a plaint should be regarded, and it should not be returned for want of correctness upon grounds of slight and immaterial mistake.(3) If a plaint was defective in form or wanting in precision it should be returned for amendment and not rejected.(4) Under the rules of the Panjab Chief Court an attempt should be made to remove ambiguity in the statement of any of the particulars before resorting to the return of the plaint for amendment.(5) For an instance of a plaint containing particulars other than those required, see the case cited below,(6) in which the plaint was argumentative and referred to evidence, and contained a prayer for the criminal prosecution of the defendant. Where the plaint disclosed a cause of action, but not with sufficient fulness, it might be returned for amendment or amended; but if this was not done the plaintiff was at liberty to prove any cause of action not inconsistent with the plaint.(7)

Clause (iii) of sect. 53 of former Code.—See as to non-joinder and misjoinder, O. II. rr. 3–7. The Court might return for amendment, but a party was not to be prejudiced because the Court had in its absence inadvertently admitted a plaint which was multifarious. The defendant had a right on a motion to take the plaint off the file to raise the question of misjoinder of causes of action before or at the settlement of issues.(8) If the cause for suing one defendant was different from that for suing another, the plaint should have been returned for amendment. In the event of serious wrongly dismissed, the defendant having admitted a considerable portion of the plaintiff's claim and taken no objection to the verificati[on]. See also Roy Mohun v. Buhoo Soondura, 10 W. R. 145 (1868).

multifariousness being discovered at the first hearing, the Court might, on the defendant's application before any evidence was recorded, require the plaintiff to elect which cause of action he would proceed to trial upon, and should direct the remainder of the claim to be withdrawn and the plaint amended accordingly.(1) Whilst the Court could not return the plaint after settlement of issues it might amend it at any time. If there were misjoinder of causes of action the plaint might be amended by striking out the part which was not properly joined.(2) Where there was misjoinder but the first Court proceeded to trial, not having returned the plaint for amendment or amended it, it should dispose of the case on the merits.(3) There was nothing in the Code to warrant the proposition that when a Court of first instance decided a question of misjoinder in favour of the plaintiff there was an end of the matter, and the defendant was precluded from raising the question in appeal.(4) Where, however, a suit was not objected to on the score of misjoinder of causes of action at or before the settlement of issues in the Court of first instance, the Court seeing, in second appeal, that the suit had proceeded through three Courts, did not feel justified in dismissing the suit.(5) The Appeal Court might dispose of the suit in the mode in which the lower Court ought to have disposed of it if it had held, as it ought to have done, that there was a misjoinder and might direct that the plaint be returned for amendment.(6)

Clause (iv) of sect. 53 of former Code.—See notes to O. II. r. 1, ante.

Amendment by Court under clause (c) of former Code.—This clause did not form part of the Code as enacted in 1887, and together with the words "at or" in clause (b), was introduced by sect. 9 of Act VII. of 1888.(7) The words "at any time before judgment" meant substantially the same as the words "at any stage of the proceedings" in the corresponding English rule, O. 28, r. 1, under which leave to amend was refused after judgment; but an amendment might be made at any time so long as anything remained to be done in an action, though it be only the assessment of damages, and even on an application for a new trial.(8) Under clause (c) the Court itself might amend at any time before judgment but not after.(9) The plaint still remained on, and was part of the file, although the Court might depute any person selected by it to take the plaint, for example, to a pardanashin woman who was plaintiff, or to a person who through illness was unable to attend Court for the purpose of its order being complied with. Any amendment under such circumstances would be an amendment by the Court itself. Under this clause the amendment was made by order of the Court, and the party had to comply with it. Further, if the amendment was one going to the maintenance of the suit and the defect in the plaint was not discovered until the suit got into a superior Court on appeal, the Appellate Court could either order the amendment to be made in that Court, or, for example, in a case in which there had been not only misjoinder of parties but misjoinder of causes of action, the Appellate Court might order the Court of first instance to do what it ought to have done at the proper stage of the suit when the suit was before it, and return the plaint to the parties so that they might make their election as to which of them was to continue the suit, and might make the necessary amendments.(1)

Amendment by Appeal Court under former Code. It was held under the Code of 1882 that an Appellate Court had power under sect. 582 of that Code, read with sect. 53, to allow an amendment of the plaint.(2) The Appellate Court might itself have made the amendment or directed the lower Court to do so. There are many cases in which amendments have been allowed on appeal, and suits have been remanded (3) for re-trial on amended plaints.(4) The High Court, in special appeal, has also directed the lower Appellate Court to amend the plaint by the insertion of a prayer for declaration

There are some observations, however, in Bai Shri Majiraba v. Maganlal, 19 B. 303 (1894); but these and some others as to the powers of an Appellate Court were not necessary for the decision, the basis of which was that the character of the suit had been changed. of the plaintiffs' right and to re-hear the appeal.(1) It has, however, been said to be undesirable to allow amendment in second appeal when the plaintiff has in two Courts never contemplated it, and has even gone so far as to persistently maintain his case as originally brought.(2) Amendment has been refused with reference to a state of facts occurring since the decision by the original Court.(3) Amendment has also generally been refused where the plaintiff persisted throughout that the suit as framed was maintainable, and permission to amend was not asked for in the lower Court.(4) In a case where no amendment was asked for and refused in the Court of first instance, but, on the other hand, objection was taken in the lower Court, and the plaintiffs elected to take an issue and to allow the suit to proceed subject to the risk of an adverse decision, the Court said: "It is true that, as a general rule, the plaintiff may be permitted even, on appeal, to amend the plaint when he had framed it bonâ fide under a mistake or erroneous advice, and the other party could be adequately compensated by an award of costs, but it must be observed that when such amendment might possibly create a necessity for fresh written statements and for fresh issues, and practically amount to a trial de novo from the commencement, it is much more convenient to leave the plaintiffs to the liberty of maintaining a suit for ejectment, so that the opposite party might in no way be prejudiced in his defence or harassed with a second trial of the same suit." (5) The stage of the proceedings, whether in the original Court or Court of Appeal, at which an application for amendment is made might effect the question whether it should be granted, as to which, see post.

Proviso to sect. 53 of last Code.—The object of this proviso was only to prohibit amendments which involved the trial of issues substantially different from those raised by the original pleadings.(6) See notes on "Change of character of suit," post.

Present provisions as to amendment.—R. 16 is taken from English O. 16, r. 27, and rr. 17 and 18 from O. 28, rr. 1 and 7. The latter rule provides that on failure to amend the order for amendment becomes void. R. 18 more specifically states what the effect of a failure to amend is. From a review of the preceding case-law and the provisions of sect. 53 of the last Code, it will be seen that the present powers of amendment are given in much wider terms. Amendment may be either by the party or by the Court. No mention is made of return for amendment, but this may take place where the party applies or is directed to make an amendment. No time is fixed as to when the amendment may be made. It may be "at any stage of the proceedings." As to the meaning of this term, vide ante, "Amendment by Court." Amendment may be by the Court of first instance or appeal, though the principles upon which the Appellate Court will proceed in such cases are in general those stated. As regards misjoinder, see now O. I. r. 13, O. II. r. 7, and sect. 99. As to amendment of applications for execution, see O. XXI. r. 17. An extremely important amendment is the omission of the proviso in sect. 53, a matter which is dealt with post, as are also the general principles on which amendment will be allowed. It may be broadly stated that in all cases where amendment has hitherto been allowed it will be permitted now, and that in many instances in which it has been refused it would be allowed under the present provisions, the object of which is to extend to India the liberal principles which govern English Courts under which all such amendments are made as are necessary for determining the real questions in controversy between the parties subject to certain qualifications which are hereinafter stated.

Case desired to be made must be raised.—In the first place a question not raised by the plaint ought not to be decided by the Court.(1) The Judicial Committee has held,(2) that though it is disposed to give a liberal construction to pleadings in Indian Courts, so as to allow every question to be raised and discussed in the suit, yet a plaintiff cannot be entitled to relief upon facts and documents neither stated nor referred to in the pleadings. The determination in a cause must be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made.(3) Even where it was argued that the plaintiff had been misled by various representations made by the defendant into framing his suit as it was then framed, the Privy Council said that even if that were so it would not empower them to depart from the rule, which has always prevailed, that a man must recover according to his allegations and his proofs, and that it would not enable them to allow an entirely new case to be brought forward which was not set up or hinted at in the plaint.(4) Further, it is to be noted that stricter rules as regards pleading are enacted by the present Code.

Matters in dispute should be ascertained not only from the plaint and answer, but also at the first hearing of the suit, when issues are settled; and any indistinctness in the form of the plaint does not require that a decision come to upon issues fixed in the lower Court between the parties should be set aside.(1) In the case cited,(2) the Privy Council said: "Some importance was attached by learned counsel for the respondents to the manner in which the plaintiff's case was stated in the plaint, but their Lordships are of opinion that in dealing with the case they must look not to the mere wording of the plaint, but to the issue which was settled for trial and to the manner in which the case was treated by the lower Courts." (3) In the case last cited it was pointed out that the object of the plaint was merely to bring the matter in dispute before the Court, but it was for the latter, upon the statements before it, to determine the real issue between the parties.(4) The substance, and not merely the form, of the plaint must be looked at. Where a plaintiff in form seeks for confirmation of possession, yet sets out and states circumstances which are in themselves a dispossession, the suit should be treated really as one for recovery of possession.(5) Where a suit remains substantially the same as one for rent, the fact that the plaintiff claims bhowlee rent will not disentitle him to a decree for nugdee rent, the defendant admitting that rent of this kind was payable.(6)

Where there is a slight variance between a plaintiff's pleading and his evidence, but the defendant has not been misled thereby, or induced to refrain from calling evidence, the plaintiff's suit should not be dismissed.(7) Though a plaintiff does not prove the precise claim which he makes, if he is substantially right he ought to have a decree, and not to be left to bring another suit.(8) A plaintiff who brings forward a bonâ fide case which he proves in substance, though not in form, will be assisted by the Court, but in the absence of such special circumstances no such assistance will be afforded.(9) It is not a rule of universal application that a plaintiff who claims too much or fails to admit reasonable deductions from his claim is therefore to be deprived of that to which he is legally entitled.(10) It might promote honesty among litigants if every plaintiff who demanded more than his due, and who supported his demand by perjury or forgery, were made to forfeit the whole of his claim; but it is almost needless to say that that is not the law. Such a plaintiff may properly be mulcted in costs, or he may be punished in a criminal Court; but if he have a good cause of action a civil Court must give him a decree for so much of his claim as he succeeds in establishing. (1) While a plaintiff must be limited to the case which he puts forward in the plaint, he may put forward an alternative case from the commencement, in which case the defendant will then know that he has more than one case to meet, and will not be taken by surprise.(2) There is nothing in the law to prevent a plaintiff from setting up two proprietary rights in the alternative, such as are based upon the ground that the land is included in his ancestral jama, and the other on the ground of his having held adverse possession for more than twelve years.(3) In a suit on settlement of account and an agreement to pay, the plaintiff may fall back as an alternative upon the foundation of his case, namely, that in the account current between himself and the defendant the latter was indebted to him.(4) And a suit brought on the allegation that partnership accounts had been adjusted, and in the alternative for such other relief as might be proper, was allowed to be amended by omitting the allegation of adjustment and inserting an alternative prayer for an account.(5) In a suit to recover land as part of joint estate, but which was subsequently divided into separate shares; held, that upon failure of proof of allegation of partition plaintiff might obtain relief upon the first allegation.(6) If a plaintiff claims possession generally under some alleged title, such as purchase or gift, and also upon the ground of twelve years' possession, he is entitled to succeed on the latter ground, even though he fail upon the former.(7) Where, in a suit for possession, a specific title is alleged but not proved, the plaintiff, in order to succeed on twelve years' adverse possession, must raise it so clearly in the first Court that his adversary knew he intended to rely on it.(8) There is, however, a distinction between suits for confirmation of possession under a certain title and declaration of title, and suits in ejectment to recover possession. A person ought not to be allowed to obtain a declaratory decree except in respect of the very title which he asserts and upon which he goes to trial.(1) A plaintiff must be limited to the case which he puts forward in his plaint, but he may put forward an alternative case in his plaint from the commencement, as the defendant then will know that he has more than one case to meet and will not be taken by surprise.(2) The rule, however, that a party must prove the particular title he sets up, must not be confounded with the question of the means of proving it. Thus, if a person claims to hold under a grant, such grant being evidenced by a sunnud, and fails to prove the latter, he may prove the grant by other means.(3)

Amendment.—In so far, as already stated, relief can only be given on a case made in a plaint formally framed in accordance with the provisions of the Code, provisions for amendment are necessary when the plaint is either in substance, or form, defective. This section is but one of several dealing with the question of the amendment of pleadings or proceedings.(4) Amendments may be of three kinds: (5) (a) those which a party desires to make in his own pleadings or proceedings; (b) in his opponent's pleadings and proceedings against the latter's will; (6) (c) amendments which the Court thinks right to make of its own motion in order to determine the real questions in controversy between the parties.(7) The present rules deals with the amendment of the plaintiff's pleadings upon the application of the plaintiff himself, of or the defendant, or at the instance of the Court of its own motion. The amendment sought may be in respect of substance, parties, or relief. The date of amendment is immaterial for purposes of limitation. The date of institution of a suit is the date of the first presentation of the plaint, and if the plaint is returned for amendment and is then presented again within the time allowed, the date of first presentation is the date of institution.(8)

General principles on which amendment is granted.—Amendment is not the right of the suitor in all circumstances.(9) It was held under the last Code that it was not enough to show that the proposed amendment did not alter the character of the suit.(10) The section gave the Court a discretion which, however, was to be guided by judicial principles.(11) If by inadvertence, or other cause, the recorded issues (the substance and not the mere literal wording of which is to be regarded) do not enable the Court to try the whole case on the merits, an opportunity should (the Privy Council have said) be afforded by amendment, and, if need be, by adjournment, for the decision of the real points in dispute.(1) Where a party who has an honest case has, either through ignorance,(2) bonâ fide mistake, or some misapprehension, not placed the real facts before the Court,(3) or has misconceived his cause of action and form of suit,(4) he should be allowed to amend, where this may be done without injustice to the defendant, and, in appeal, particularly where the objection that the suit was not maintainable was not taken in the first Court.(5) Where, however, there is reason to think that an omission to claim was deliberate, it would, it has been said, generally not be proper to allow amendment.(6) In short, the object of a trial being to get at the rights of the parties, any amendment which may be required for that purpose should, subject to the general principles to which reference is about to be made, be allowed. Apart from the question of limitation, it is unjust to a plaintiff to put him to the great expense of a new suit when a reasonable amendment, not inconsistent with his case as it originally stood, might equally well answer his purpose as the new suit.(7)

As to the principles governing the grant of leave to amend, the Courts should be guided by the dicta of the English Judges here cited. It was no doubt said,(8) with reference to the provisions of the last Code, that the Judicature Act allowed more latitude and scope to judicial discretion than was permitted by that Code. It is, however, submitted that the English rule, O. 28, r. 1, as practically worked, was, to some extent, the same as that which existed under that Code. For though that rule contains no such proviso as that of this section in the Code of 1882, the English Courts do, in practice, refuse an amendment which will change the action into one of a substantially different character which would more conveniently be the subject of a fresh action.(9) In presenting the report of the Select Committee on the amended Bill, Mr. Scoble said: "The object of sect. 9 is to give the Courts greater power of amendments of plaints than they at present possess. The tendency of the Courts in England is to allow the greatest latitude in this direction. In this country, where there is every likelihood of a poor suitor acting in ignorance or under the advice of ignorant advisers, and launching an honest case in a clumsy and irrational manner, it appeared to the Select Committee there was abundant reason for adopting the English rule. The only necessary limitation is to prevent a suit of one character from being turned by amendment into a suit of a different character; and it is therefore provided that amendments which would have this effect are not to be allowed." (1) This limitation was based on the inconvenience which might be caused to a defendant who, summoned to answer one suit, might otherwise be called upon, probably to his surprise, to defend an entirely different claim. Rule 16 has been taken from O. 19, r. 27 of the English rules, and r. 17 has been worded in close conformity with the English O. 28, r. 1, a portion of it being taken totidem verbis from the English Order. The proviso against converting a suit into one of a different character has been removed. As to the effect of this, vide post, "Change of character of suit."

Bramwell, L.J., said: (2) "My practice has always been to give leave to amend unless I have been satisfied that the party applying was acting mala fide, or that, by his blunder, he had done some injury to his opponent which could not be compensated for by costs or otherwise." "However negligent or careless" (said Brett, M.R.) "may have been the first omission, and however late the proposed amendment, the amendment should be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side. There is no injustice if the other side can be compensated by costs." (3) An amendment should be allowed "whenever it can be done without injustice to the other side, and even where they have been put to certain expense and delay, yet if they can be compensated for that in any way, an amendment ought to be allowed for the purpose of raising the real question between the parties." (4) "There is one panacea which heals every sore in litigation, and that is costs." (5) "I know of no kind of error or mistake, which, if not fraudulent or intended to overreach, the Court ought not to correct, if it can be done without injustice to the other party. Courts do not exist for the sake of discipline, but for the sake of deciding matters in controversy, and I do not regard such an amendment as a matter of favour or grace." (6) "The test as to whether the amendment should be allowed is whether or not the defendants can amend without placing the plaintiff in such a position that he cannot be recouped, as it were, by any allowance of costs, or otherwise." (7) An amendment ought to be allowed if thereby "the real substantial question can be raised between the parties," and multiplicity of legal proceedings avoided.(8)

It is also to be noted that the stage in the suit at which the application is made may affect the question. Before the hearing there is, as a rule, little difficulty in a party obtaining leave to amend his own pleadings,(9) on payment of the costs occasioned thereby, provided that his opponent will not be placed thereby in a worse position than he would have been if the amended pleading had been delivered in the first instance,(1) or some injury caused to him for which he cannot be compensated by payment of costs.(2) An admission made inadvertently may be withdrawn and the pleading amended accordingly.(3) There will be difficulty, however, where there is ground for believing that the application is not made in good faith. Thus, if either party seeks to amend his pleading by introducing for the first time allegations of fraud, etc., the Court will ask why this new case was not presented originally; and may require to be satisfied as to the truth and substantiality of the proposed amendment.(4) It has been held that at any stage of the proceedings all amendments ought to be allowed which satisfy the two conditions of not working injustice to the opponent and of being necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties.(5) Costs are always in the discretion of the Court; in some cases they will be reserved to abide the event, or for the Judge at the trial to award.(6)

Leave may be given to amend at the hearing. But the Court will not readily allow at the trial an amendment, the necessity for which was abundantly apparent months ago, and then not asked for.(7) There is another difficulty which often arises when a party only applies for an amendment at the trial. His opponent will be taken by surprise. It is unfair that the opponent should suddenly be called upon to meet a case of which he has had no notice, and for which he is not prepared. If an amendment of such a kind be allowed at the trial, the other party may fairly demand an adjournment of the case to enable him to prepare his answer to it.(8) Often, however, the change of front has been anticipated, and a postponement is not insisted on.(9) In such cases it often happens that nothing is said about amendment, and the case continues as though the issues which are being fought had been duly raised in the pleadings.(10) But the opponent must always be allowed an opportunity of meeting the new matter, if he reasonably asks for it.(11) Where the amendment asked for is a substantial one, such that the plaintiff could not succeed without it, he will in a proper case be only allowed to amend at the trial on payment of all costs incurred up to date.(12) And in some cases the Judge will require evidence that the party applying to amend could not with reasonable diligence have discovered the new facts sooner.(1) Where the amendment has become necessary by reason of a variance between the statement of claim and the evidence given at the trial, it should be asked for at the conclusion of the plaintiff's case.(2) After all the evidence on both sides has been taken, leave to amend will, as a rule, be refused.(3) If the defendant is not present at the hearing, it has been held in England that notice must be given him of the application to amend.(4) Unless the pleading is amended, the plaintiff cannot have judgment for more than the amount named in it.(5)

After the hearing, and after judgment, the Court has no power to amend. After an interlocutory judgment, or a decree in an Admiralty action which determines liability but leaves the damages to be assessed, the Court still has power to amend the pleadings,(6) and even to add or substitute parties.(7) As to amendment in appeal, vide ante.

General principles on which leave to amend is refused.—The following are some of the principal grounds on which the Courts in their discretion may refuse leave to amend: (8) Where the amendment desired could not be made without prejudicing the defendant in such a way that he cannot be recouped by costs; (9) and where a right accrued might be prejudiced.(10) Thus, though it was under the last Code broadly held that a Court was not precluded from allowing an amendment by the circumstance that at the time of the amendment a suit for what was added by the amendment would be barred by limitation,(11) the general rule was that a plaintiff would not be allowed to amend by setting up fresh claims in respect of causes of action which have, since the institution of the suit, become barred; (12) though peculiar circumstances might take the case out of the ordinary rule,(13) and the Privy Council have actually allowed an amendment on the ground that, if the plaintiff were left to bring a fresh suit, it might be met by a plea of limitation, a defence which, under the circumstances of the case, was considered inequitable.(1) In a recent case in the Madras High Court it was held that a petition for an amendment of a plaint based on no new facts and asking for a further relief (in this instance, recovery of money) may be allowed if it is put in before evidence has been taken, and if there is no injustice to the defendants, even when it is barred by limitation between its date and the date of the plaint.(2) Trivial and mere technical amendments are discouraged.(3) The Court will always consider the materiality of the proposed amendment, and unless material amendment will not be allowed.(4) A slight delay is not a sufficient ground for refusing leave; but if an application which could easily have been made at a much earlier stage of the proceedings be delayed until after evidence given, and a point of law argued, leave may be refused.(5) This principle has been applied to the suit itself. Where the plaintiff was guilty of delay, and filed the suit on the last day but one on which the law of limitation would permit him to file it, amendment was refused.(6) The application may also be refused if the Court is not satisfied as to the truth and substantiality of the proposed amendment, and has reason to think that the application is not an honest one.(7)

It has also been said by Lord Esher, M.R., to be "the universal practice, except in the most exceptional cases, not to allow an amendment for the purpose of adding a plea of fraud where fraud has not been pleaded in the first instance." (8) The circumstances referred to are doubtless those where the plaintiff thoroughly satisfies the Court upon the point why the charge was not made before. It is also a well-known rule that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind cannot, on failure of proof, be substituted for it.(9) It was held that a plaint which contained general allegations, but no specific instances of fraud, could not be amended in second appeal;(10) and where fraud was charged, but the suit was brought in the wrong form, the Court refused to allow the plaint to be amended, as to do so in that case would change the character of the suit.(11) Peacock, C.J., said: "We think that it would not be the exercise of a sound discretion to allow a party who relies upon a document to set up a fresh case, where an issue as to the execution of such document is found against him and there are good grounds for believing the document to be a forgery." Amendment of substance of plaint.—An amendment may be sought, either in respect of the substance or form of the plaint, or the parties to the suit or the relief sought. So far as amendment of the substance or form of the plaint is concerned, the matter has already been dealt with. If, for instance, as regards formal matters, the verification is defective, it will be amended.(1) It is the duty of the Court to take care that the plaint, when filed, is an accurate and sufficient statement of the essential ingredients of the plaintiff's claim.(2) The subject of parties and relief is dealt with in the following paragraphs.

Amendment as to parties.—A plaint which may be amended in substance may require, by reason of such amendment, an amendment in respect of parties. So a suit for collision, originally filed as an action in personam against the owners of the ship, has been amended also into an action in rem, and the ship added as a party defendant.(3) But amendment may have reference to parties only, as well as to the substance of the claim. Where a suit was brought by several persons on the basis of a right vested in them jointly and severally, the plaint was amended by the omission of the names of all the plaintiffs except one.(4) The plaint will be amended where there is a change of parties, or the parties are wrongly described.(5) But where the defendants were dead when the suit was instituted, the Court, on appeal, refused to amend by instituting the legal representatives, as the defendant was likely to be precluded from pleading limitation; (6) and where the wrong parties were sued, the Court in the under-mentioned cases refused amendment.(7) Where A and B sued, and it appeared that A alone was entitled, the name of B was ordered to be struck out and the suit proceeded with.(8) But where plaintiffs suing jointly succeeded only in making out the title of one of them to an undivided moiety, the suit was dismissed.(9)

Amendment as to relief.—In suits under the Code, the Court is certainly bound to take into consideration all the rights of the parties to the suit, whether legal or equitable, and by its decree to give effect to those rights as far as possible; but it should confine itself to granting such relief as is prayed by the plaint.(1) It cannot grant relief of a different kind from that prayed for, such as could not have been properly granted except on an amendment of the plaint; (2) or change the suit so that the question involved in it is irrelevant to the relief claimed. (3) If, however, the specific right and infraction of it are not altered, the Court may give relief less than that claimed, or a portion of the relief claimed.(4) The Court, however, whether of first instance or of appeal, has no power to make a decree in favour of the plaintiff beyond the amount stated in the plaint. The plaint may, however, be amended before judgment, so as to enable a Court to pass such a decree.(5)

As regards amendment, it has been broadly affirmed (6) that "an alteration in the relief does not alter the character of a suit." It is perhaps more correct to say that an amendment of relief simply does not generally (7) involve such a change in the suit as to make its character inconsistent in the terms of the proviso of the last Code. It has also been held that where the object of an amendment of the plaint was merely to seek relief ancillary to the principal prayer, such amendment did not alter the character of the suit.(8) So the relief for declaration is in most cases for recovery of possession claimed as ancillary to the latter, and there can be no inconsistency between the two.(9)

The amendment may be in respect of matters occurring before or after suit brought. So as regards the first alternative, where the plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption after filing his plaint discovered that the property in suit had been described by mistake as being of a slightly less area than it was in reality, and omitted to claim for a small fraction of the share sold, the plaint was allowed to be amended.(1) A change in the relief asked is generally allowed on appeal, especially by the addition of a prayer for consequential relief in a suit for declaration.(2) A plaint in a suit for the cancellation of a deed of gift of certain land has been amended so as to make it a suit for possession of that land after the cancellation of the deed.(3) As regards events occurring after suit, the general rule is that the rights of parties must be ascertained as at the date of the action brought, and not with reference to events occurring after the institution of the action.(4) But this section does not prevent a plaintiff, who has been ousted after suit brought for declaration of title, from amending his plaint by adding a prayer for possession, the suit as amended not being inconsistent with the suit as originally framed, both being based upon the same title.(5) Where the reliefs claimed and the facts on which they are claimed are stated in the original plaint, this can be amended by addition of a further relief if it does not involve adding anything to the allegations in the plaint.(6) And where a plaintiff filed a suit to obtain a declaration that certain property belonged to his judgment-debtor, and that the defendants had no right to it, and, pending proceedings, purchased the property, it was held that he was still entitled to a declaratory decree, for the change of circumstances brought about by the plaintiff himself purchasing the property did not take away the right to sue which had already accrued to him.(7) But where an amendment rests on an event which did not occur until after the suit had been instituted and had been dealt with by the Court of first instance, and also substantially alters the original cause of action, it will be disallowed.(8) A mortgagee may relinquish his claim for sale and ask simply for a money decree. Such an amendment does not amount to a conversion of the suit into a suit of another and inconsistent character.(9)

In Annapa v. Ganpati, 5 B. 181 (1880), the suit was for interest only. The plaint was amended so as to make the suit for account and payment of principal and interest. as a matter of discretion. Sect. 53 of the last Code was, however, mandatory in this, namely, that no amendment could be allowed which converted a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. While the power of the Court extended to the elucidation of what was ambiguous, to the amendment of what was erroneous, and the supplying of what was defective, it did not extend to the conversion of a suit of one character into another inconsistent with and opposed to it, e.g. a suit for possession with mesne profits into one for resumption,(1) or a claim on contract to one in tort.(2)

A number of cases will be found reported (not very profitably) on this point, for it must be remembered that each case is only an authority so far as the same set of facts may (which is unlikely) exist in a subsequent case.(3) In some decisions a formal application was made to amend. In others, a new case was sought to be argued, which, however, could only have been done after an application to amend had been made and granted, and the matter was dealt with as, in effect, an application to amend, since a decree could only be made on allegations formally raised at the trial. Further, it is to be noted that the application for amendment was made at differing stages of the suit and under different circumstances, and it may be that, as already stated, an application which, if made before the hearing, would be granted, might, if made after hearing, be refused. Whether an amendment is inconsistent with the suit as originally framed may be tested by an inquiry into the nature of the evidence to be offered in either case.(4) Amendment was not allowed, on the ground that the suit had been changed, in the following cases :—

Claim for rent on contract; claim for use and occupation; (5) claim for hire of cargo boats; claim for agency account in respect of same; (6) claim for dower on written agreement; claim for same on custom; (7) claim based on den-mohur right of widow; claim for decree to extent of rights of widow and her son as heirs; (8) claim as adopted son; claim as heir; (9) claim to recover from defendant money paid by him to X on the ground that such payment was unauthorized; claim for damages for negligence in selecting X as agent for plaintiff; (10) claim that a sale had been made to pay immoral debts; claim that the father could only alienate his own share; (11) claim based on gift by will; claim based on inheritance; (12) claim to set aside alienation on ground of illegitimacy of party making it; claim for same on ground that it was without consent of other heirs; (13) claim for a pottah on commencement raise an alternative case. Where he has not done so he may have leave to amend his plaint and to state his case correctly therein if the Court thinks that he has rested his claim upon wrong grounds from misinformation, ignorance of law or fact, mistake or misconstruction of documents.(1) Where in a suit for the recovery of a sum due on account, the defendant raised a plea of limitation, leave was granted to amend the plaint by setting out an acknowledgment signed by the defendant within the period of limitation.(2) Where in a suit for rent the plaintiffs described themselves as "executors and trustees of the properties of an endowment" they were allowed to describe themselves as "de facto managers and persons interested in the endowment."(3) Where it was argued that an amendment allowing an alternative case to be raised converted the suit into one of another and inconsistent character, it was held that the alternative claim which arose out of, and was immediately connected with, the same transaction was not inconsistent; (4) the Court, however, adding that the proviso to this section in the last Code must be read with sects. 42 and 45 of that Code, and was not intended to interfere with them. Sed quære as to whether this was not stated too broadly. It does not follow that because a plaint might have originally been brought in a particular form, but was not, that therefore it must be amended into that form. If so, the object of the provision might in some cases be defeated.

As already pointed out, the section has been now amended. In all cases the Court has a discretion.(5) In exercising that discretion, it will, following the English practice, in general refuse an amendment which changes the action into one of a substantially different character which would more conveniently be the subject of a fresh action. The question thus becomes one of discretion and not subject to a rigid rule. Whether amendment should be allowed must depend on the circumstances of each case. Mere technical arguments showing a conversion of character will not be given effect to. There are such cases of conversion where amendment may be properly allowed. On the other hand, any substantial change in the claim made, making it more convenient that they should be the subject of a fresh action, will be refused.

Costs.—In England the amendment may be allowed "on such terms as may be just."(6) And the Courts may, therefore, there impose terms as to other matters than costs.(7) In this country the Courts could formerly, by the terms of the former section, impose terms only in regard to costs. As to these, they are entirely in the discretion of the Court, and they are sometimes (particularly when the application is made before trial) reserved.(8) The section has, however, now been amended in conformity with the English rule.

ORDER VII.

Plaint.

1. The plaint shall contain the following particulars :—

Particulars to be contained in plaint.

(a) the name of the Court in which the suit is brought ;

(b) the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff ;

(c) the name, description and place of residence of the defendant, so far as they can be ascertained ;

(d) where the plaintiff or the defendant is a minor or a person of unsound mind, a statement to that effect ;

(e) the facts constituting the cause of action and when it arose ;

(f) the facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction ;

(g) the relief which the plaintiff claims ;

(h) where the plaintiff has allowed a set-off or relinquished a portion of his claim, the amount so allowed or relinquished ; and

(i) a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of court-fees, so far as the case admits.

2. Where the plaintiff seeks the recovery of money, the plaint shall state the precise amount claimed :

In money suits.

But where the plaintiff sues for mesne profits, or for an amount which will be found due to him on taking unsettled accounts between him and the defendant, the plaint shall state approximately the amount sued for.

3. Where the subject-matter of the suit is immoveable property, the plaint shall contain a description of the property sufficient to identify it, and, in case such property can be identified by boundaries or numbers in a record of settlement or survey, the plaint shall specify such boundaries or numbers.

Where the subject-matter of the suit is immoveable property.

When plaintiff sues as representative.

4. Where the plaintiff sues in a representative character, the plaint shall show not only that he has an actual existing interest in the subject-matter, but that he has taken the steps (if any) necessary to enable him to institute a suit concerning it.

Defendant's interest and liability to be shown.

5. The plaint shall show that the defendant is or claims to be interested in the subject-matter, and that he is liable to be called upon to answer the plaintiff's demand.

Grounds of exemption from limitation law.

6. Where the suit is instituted after the expiration of the period prescribed by the law of limitation, the plaint shall show the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed.

Plaint.—The object of a plaint is simply to state the grounds and relief upon and in respect of which a suitor seeks the assistance of the Court. Its essential parts are: (i) the title, or, as it is sometimes called, the caption; (ii) the statement; and (iii) the relief; the first of which is referred to in clauses (a), (b), (c), and (d) of rule 1, the second in clauses (e) and (h), and the third in clause (g). The provisions of sect. 50 which these rules replace was criticized as not complete. Thus it has been said it is "a general rule, and the section appears to presuppose that the capacity of parties suing or sued should be alleged in the plaint, but it does not provide for such allegations expressly. Similarly, in the case of joinder of causes of action, the circumstances allowing the joinder should be stated, but there is no provision as to that. There appears to be no doubt, however, that on the analogy of the practice of other countries all such facts should be stated in the plaint, notwithstanding the last clause of sect. 53, clause (b) (ii), which provides for a return of the plaint for amendment if it contains particulars other than those mentioned in this section. It is held in the United States that the fact of partnership should be alleged in the plaint, as partnership demands and liabilities being joint, such allegation is necessary to authorize the joinder of parties. So, also, the value of suit and the locality of its subject-matter and of its cause of action, and other circumstances on which the jurisdiction of the Court may depend must be alleged. Thus the Bombay High Court Circulars (Chap. I. r. 4) expressly lay down, that in every suit the Court shall require the plaintiff to state clearly in the plaint how the value of the suit has been arrived at, and that in a suit for the price of goods sold retail, the plaint should either set out the account in detail, or should be accompanied by a copy of the account to be served upon the defendant. Similarly, if any law authorizes a suit only after the plaintiff has taken some other proceedings, given some notice, or received leave or sanction of some Court, or obtained a certificate of some officer, the plaint must state that those proceedings have been taken, notice given, leave or sanction received, or certificate obtained, as the case may be." (1) The amended section adds a statement of the value of the subject-matter.

"Shall contain."—The word formerly used was "must," and was held to be a strong imperative.(2)

Title. Rule 1, clauses (a), (b), (c), (d).—The name should be given, if possible, in full and to the extent necessary to fully identify the party. If there be more than one plaintiff, or more than one defendant, the name of each must be given. As to cases of agents, assignees, benamidars, partners, and others, see notes to O. I. rr. 1, 4. And as regards suits by or against Government and public officers,(3) aliens and foreign native rulers,(4) corporations and companies,(5) trustees and executors,(6) firms,(7) minors,(8) and military men,(9) see also the portions of the Code noted.

"If a person sues in a representative or official capacity, the capacity should be indicated in the title. The same should also be done when he sues merely as a member of a firm, or as secretary or agent of some corporation; or on behalf of a larger number of persons. And the capacity is generally indicated by adding to the name of the party a designation denoting the special character or capacity which he sustains. But the designation may be taken as merely descriptio personæ, unless it is preceded by the word 'as' or some equivalent of it.(10) And the general rule appears to be that the capacity in which a party sues or be sued should not only be indicated in the title, but stated in the body of the plaint also." (11)

To describe the plaintiff as residing in Chitpore Road in the town of Calcutta, is not a sufficient description of his place of abode; nor is it sufficient under this section to describe the defendant as formerly of Calcutta without alleging that the plaintiff has been unable to ascertain his place of residence more definitely.(12) Where it was contended that the plaint was bad as the claim was set out by G. W. H., manager (of a bank), but the words should have been "The Mussoorie Bank, Limited," it was held to be no ground for returning the plaint, as the intention and meaning of the plaint was clear that the circumstances set out applied to the bank, and the words were not capable of any other meaning.(13)

(1) Hukm Chand, C. P. C. 584. It may, however, be perhaps contended that some of the matters referred to would come within clause (e). Other cases might be met by other portions of the Code, as e.g. s. 80, which requires a plaint to allege the giving of notice or by other Acts.

The defendant's name is given in the plaint in the same manner as the plaintiff's.

All those titles by which a party is generally known ought to be given, and it is not the true construction of the section "to say that where a man has titles, the claim to which titles cannot rationally be disputed, by which he is generally known, all that the Code requires is that he should be described in such a way" as may be sufficient for identification.(1) In the case cited, an order rejecting the plaint because plaintiff did not amend it, so as to give the full titles to the defendant, was held to be correct, their Lordships of the Privy Council observing that "if a plaintiff, from animosity, from pique, or anything, in fact, but a bonâ fide dispute as to the right to a title, obstinately refuses to give his adversary that title by which he is generally recognized, the Court ought not to permit or sanction that species of insult."

Where a practice existed in the Madras Courts to give as part of the description the age as well as the father's name, and these were not given, the High Court refused to interfere with an order rejecting the plaint.(2) It is not sufficient to describe the defendant merely as formerly of Coloolollah in Calcutta, without alleging that the plaintiff has been unable to ascertain his present residence.(3) Where a plaint described the defendant as "Mrs. S. G. B. of Mussoorie," and stated that she was executrix of the deceased B., it was held not to be open to objection, as it was clear that the defendant was stated to be executrix of the deceased, and the suit was brought against her in that capacity.(4)

There is no provision in the Code as to how the defendant is to be sued and named in the plaint when his real name is not known to the plaintiff, and cannot be ascertained by reasonable diligence.(5) Names are only used to designate persons and as a means of identifying them. The action is not against the name, but against the person designated thereby. If therefore the real defendant has been properly served with a summons in a fictitious name, and he does not appear to defend the suit, a judgment rendered against him in such name will be as effective against him as if his true name had been given in the proceedings in the action.(6)

It is one of the first essentials of a suit that the parties, and specially the defendant, must be alive at the time of the institution of the suit. If the person named as defendant is found to have been dead at the time of the presentation of the plaint, the Court will have no jurisdiction over it,(1) and must refuse to proceed further, leaving the plaintiff to begin de novo against any person against whom he may have a right to proceed.(2) It has even been held in the United States that if one of the defendants was dead the judgment will be void as against the other defendants also.(3) And the principle appears to be of a general application. Thus Freeman, in his work on Judgments,(4) observes that "no sort of jurisdiction can be obtained against one who was dead when suit was commenced against him as a defendant, or in his name as plaintiff; and that no judicial record can be made which will estop those claiming under him from showing that he died before the action was begun; and that a judgment for or against him must necessarily be void." It is stated (5) that the Courts in several States of the American Union have held the same, even in suits against a corporation, commenced after its being dissolved,(6) though the rule does not appear to have been there applied with the same strictness in the case of a plaintiff.(7) Thus a judgment in a suit instituted in the name of a party who is dead at the time the suit is brought, has been held in some cases to be only voidable.(8) And Mr. Black, in his work on Judgments,(9) observes that "if an action is commenced in the name of a person already dead in interest, or if one of several joint claimants is dead before action brought, it is held that the defendant must take advantage of the fact by plea in abatement, at the peril of being estopped by his silence, and the judgment for plaintiff will not be disturbed." trial what is the real point to be discussed and decided.(1) The two points to be attended to are the form of, and then the contents of, the statement. As to the first, the former section states that the language must be both plain and concise.(2) This is a matter now dealt with in O. VI. r. 2. The material parts should be stated in a summary form, clearly and precisely, yet briefly and succinctly. While a liberal construction should be given to pleadings, so as to give effect to their meaning to be collected from their whole tenor, they ought to be expressed with sufficient definiteness to enable the opposite party to understand the case he is called upon to meet.(3) To avoid prolixity, the pleader should omit every allegation which is immaterial and unnecessary, as also all unnecessary details when alleging parts which are material.(4) A certain amount of detail is necessary. "Although pleadings must now be concise, they must also be precise." (5)

The statement of facts must be with specific particularity, and not by way of vague generalizations. As observed by Reed, J., in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Colorado in Robinson v. Dolores,(6) "the conclusions of the pleader, stated as facts, broad generalizations, sweeping and comprehensive assertions of conspiracy, fraud, mismanagement, and incompetency, cannot be made, in pleading, to supply the wants of specific facts."

Thus it is a settled rule, that in an action for false and fraudulent misrepresentation, the statement of claim should state the details of each alleged misrepresentation.(7) In fact, it is a general rule, that where fraud is intended to be charged, its details must be specified; and general allegations, however strong, are insufficient to constitute an averment of it.(8) See O. V. r. 4. In the first cited case, Lord Selborne observed, that "with regard to fraud, if there be any principle which is perfectly well settled, it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are

The Panjab Chief Court, in its "Instructions to Judicial Officers" (s. 2, r. 8 (iii.)), laid down "Plaints containing vague and loose statements of a general character alleging 'fraud,' 'collusion,' 'deceit,' 'illegal and fraudulent acts,' and the like, which are never made to take a definite shape and are frequently impossible to prove, are frequently admitted. This should not be allowed. Where fraud is alleged, the particular facts showing that it has actually been committed must be plainly and definitely set forth; the plaint being returned for amendment in this respect when necessary."

stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice." This was cited with approval in the Privy Council,(1) by Lord Watson, who said: "When fraud is charged against the defendants, it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. There can be no objection to the use of such general words as 'fraud' or 'collusion,' but they are quite ineffectual to give a fraudulent colour to the particular statements of fact in the plaint, unless these statements, taken by themselves, are such as to imply that a fraud has actually been committed." Thus a plaint to set aside an award must definitely state some fraud or other malpractice of the opposite party.(2) The decision of the Privy Council cited, was acted upon in a case (3) in the Bombay High Court, Fulton, J., observing that the plaint ought, immediately on presentation, to have been rejected or returned for amendment, as it did not disclose a cause of action. A charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid.(4) and it must be so proved at the hearing of the case, and cannot be reserved and proved in the course of taking accounts.(5)

Facts must be stated as facts. Modern pleadings are merely concise statements of the facts. Inferences of law should not be pleaded. Pleadings should not contain mere arguments.(6) A plaintiff thus cannot aver that "he is entitled to" property, for this is a conclusion of mixed fact and law. He must state the facts which, in his opinion, give him that title. The material facts only should be pleaded. But each party must always state his whole case, and all the facts which are essential to the cause of action, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved,(7) though "there are many cases in which facts and evidence are so mixed up as to be almost undistinguishable." (8) In other words, only operative facts, as distinguished from probative or evidential facts, should be pleaded, and, of the former, only the ultimate facts.

The plaint should include all the existing points on which the plaintiff can succeed.(9) And a plaintiff is only entitled to succeed upon the cause of action alleged by him in his plaint.(10) It is not, however, necessary for the plaintiff to state in what form of action he sues.(11)

Where the plaint discloses all the facts constituting the cause of action, the form of the action is immaterial. Thus, in a suit for mortgage money and interest by the enforcement of the mortgage lien, even if the hypothecation is not proved, a personal decree may be given for the amount claimed as damages for breach of the contract to give possession of the mortgaged property; (1) the Court observing, in the latter cited case, that it was immaterial whether the demand was regarded in the light of a suit for compensation in damages for breach of the contract, or for money had and received for the plaintiff's use, or for money lent. So also, in a suit for rent on a kabulyat, if the kabulyat is not proved, a decree may be given for rent at the rate proved to be paid before the alleged kabulyat if there should be evidence of that,(2) even though that may not have been expressly claimed in the plaint. In the under-mentioned case (3) this was not done, as there was no such evidence; but the Full Bench said: "It is in the discretion of the Court to amend the plaint or the issues, and to allow it (i.e. the alternative claim for rent paid before) to be tried. And where the omission to make the claim in the plaint appears to have been from inadvertence or by mistake, it would be proper to do so." Where in a suit for possession of certain land on the basis of a lease granted to plaintiff in 1234, it was alleged that the plaintiff had continued to hold it since then as a lessee from year to year, he was allowed a decree on the ground of the facts proved showing that he had an occupancy right, such alternative title not being inconsistent with the alleged title under the lease.(4)

Nextly, as to the contents of the statement. A defendant is entitled at the earliest stage of the hearing to obtain the declaration of the Court upon the question whether the plaint discloses a cause of action.(5)

Among ultimate operative facts, the plaintiff's title or right which has been infringed must be first stated. The expression "cause of action" has been understood to be used in this section in its broad sense, as including both the infringement and the right infringed, which latter must therefore be set out in the statement of the plaintiff's cause of action. Thus, in a suit for redemption of a mortgage, the mortgage must be stated.(6) In a suit for a declaration of title to a property which the plaintiff admits was sold to the defendant's ancestors, and to which the plaintiff cannot establish a right without setting aside that sale, the plaintiff should allege the circumstances which he relies upon for avoiding it.(7) And where the plaintiff's right to the thing sued for is derived by assignment, the fact of the assignment ought to be stated in the plaint.(8) A plaintiff suing for possession of land by redemption of the mortgage, must show in his plaint the existing title he intends or hopes to prove, and upon which he relies as entitling him to the relief which he asks.(9) It is a general principle, that a plaintiff suing for possession must

In the case cited, Edge, C.J., with whom the other Judges concurred, observed that it would not have been sufficient to state "that a mortgage of the land in question had been granted to the defendant, or his ancestors, and that they, as the assignees of the mortgagor's right, were entitled to redeem on show that at the date of the suit he was entitled to that relief.(1) It has thus been held that the owner of demised land cannot sue to eject even a trespasser so long as the lease is outstanding.(2) The Punjab Chief Court, in its Instructions (3) to Judicial Officers, laid down that "it should appear in the plaint that the persons, if more than one, who sue together as plaintiffs, all, either jointly, severally, or in the alternative, claim the right which it is the object of the suit to vindicate."

Where the plaintiff's right alone constitutes the cause of action, it will be sufficient to allege only that right. Thus, in an action for partition, the plaint should state the titles and interests of the co-tenants, plaintiff, and defendant; but it is neither necessary nor proper to show any derangement of the plaintiff's title.(4) But where the suit has been necessitated by any act done to jeopardize the plaintiff's right or evidence of it, that act should also be stated. Thus, in a suit for a declaration of right, the plaint should specify not only the title to that right, but also the act of interference with that right (5) and the circumstances which necessitate the application for the declaration.(6) Where in a suit by a relative of a minor against his administrator, the plaint merely stated that the conduct of the defendant was improper, and that the plaintiff had suspicions that the defendant would waste the property of the minor, but failed to specify any instance of malversation, or to give any reason, plausible or otherwise, for believing that the defendant would waste the estate; the plaint was rejected.(7) Similarly, in a suit to compel one's neighbours to agree to a particular line of boundary being marked out between plaintiffs' lands and theirs, it must be stated that they have by some overt act transgressed that boundary.(8) In a suit to have a contract cancelled, and the plaintiff's deposit returned with damages, the plaint only alleged that the contract was "caused by one of the parties to it being under a mistake as to a matter of fact," and the High Court held that as that would not have made the contract voidable, the plaint did not disclose a cause of action, and that it should have been returned for amendment on that ground.(9)

Where a suit is based on the actual infringement of a right, the infringement and the facts constituting the infringement should also be stated. Thus in a suit for damages for injury done, the nature of the injury should be set out.(2) And a suit to fix a boundary should show that the boundary has been transgressed.(3)

The plaintiff may base his claim on alternative titles which are not inconsistent with each other; (4) as, for example, when a person claims possession of certain land by hereditary guzashta right, or, in the alternative, by the right derived from adverse possession for twelve years; (5) or upon a mortgage and deed of sale.(6) And a mortgagor suing for redemption may aver that the mortgage money has been repaid, and that if anything be found to be due, that he will pay it.(7) But inconsistent titles, it has been held, should not be allowed to be put forward, as, for example, a claim to hold a hat on the ground of title by prescription, and of proprietary right to the land where the hat is held.(8) In the case below,(9) the gist of the plaintiff's charge against the defendant was that she never executed a deed of sale in his favour, and that the document set up by him was a forgery; and it was observed that it was not competent to the plaintiff to combine with that charge as an alternative the wholly inconsistent charge that if the plaintiff executed the document no consideration was received by her, or that fraud had been practised on her. The Bombay High Court has held that inconsistent assertions of fact cannot be permitted in the pleadings, but that on the same basis of facts two distinct titles may be put forth.(10) The decision cited of the Madras High Court was dissented from by Allahabad High Court in a case (11) in which the claim was for a declaration that a bond was not executed by the plaintiff, or, at least, that it was null and void for want of actual and valid consideration; and the Court observed that the Code did not authorize the rejection of a plaint containing prayers for such reliefs, and that it was unable to follow the Madras High Court "in holding that a Court has power to throw out a suit on the ground that, in its opinion, the plaint sets up two inconsistent cases." It, however, stated, that if a plaintiff chooses to come into Court on a plaint which contains allegations inconsistent with one another, this circumstance might militate strongly against the plaintiff succeeding in the suit though it would not justify the Court on this ground alone in dismissing it. In England, the old rule of pleading (12) was that a plaintiff could not plead inconsistent facts.

But the Judicature Act has enlarged the liberty of the plaintiff in claiming relief, and it is held that there is nothing to prevent either party from setting up two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claiming relief thereunder in the alternative,(1) and ever since the Judicature Act inconsistent defences, such as never indebted and payment, are daily pleaded. It is to be observed, however, that there are differences between the position of a plaintiff and a defendant. The plaintiff often has a personal knowledge of the facts which the defendant may not have, and while it is open to a plaintiff under certain circumstances to reserve a ground of claim, a defendant failing to insist on a ground of defence in one action cannot raise it afterwards in another action at the suit of the same party. The defendants may be complete strangers to the transactions and the defences raised may have reference to matters not necessarily or probably within their own knowledge. So a Hindu wrote his will, devising certain ancestral property to his wife, and on the following day he registered it and took the plaintiff in adoption. The testator died shortly afterwards. It was found that the plaintiff's natural father was aware of the dispositions contained in the will, and that the testator would not have adopted the plaintiff but for the consent of the natural father to those dispositions. The defendants who claimed under a gift from the wife had denied the adoption in their written statement, and on appeal raised the further plea that the adoption, if any, was conditional on the provisions of the will being acquiesced in: held, that the defendants were not precluded from succeeding on the latter of these inconsistent pleas.(2)

Probably having regard to the scope of the Code, the rule which should be followed is that inconsistent and alternative claims are allowable if arising out of facts which are not inconsistent, and that a plaintiff should probably not in any case, and certainly not where the facts are presumably within his knowledge, be allowed to plead inconsistent facts but should be called upon to elect so that the defendant may know what case he has to meet, and that a defendant similarly should not be allowed to plead inconsistent defences unless he is a stranger to the transaction, and the true state of facts is not within his personal knowledge. Thus it has been held that a Mahomedan plaintiff who first claimed the property in suit as the heir of his father, on the ground that his mother had no title to it, could not in the same suit contend that his daughter had acquired a good title to it from his mother and that therefore he was entitled to it.(3)

A plaintiff must be limited to the case which he puts forward in the plaint, but he may put forward therein an alternative case from the commencement as the defendant will then know that he has more than one case to meet, and will not be taken by surprise.(4) The different titles should be set out in the alternative for a claimant who has failed to recover property under one title may be barred from bringing a second suit to recover the same property by a different title.(1) Where in an action of ejectment against a tenant holding over, the lease sued on was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration, and the plaint was not amended to one containing an alternative claim for partition: held, that the plaintiff could not be allowed to fall back upon his general title and obtain a decree for partition.(2)

As to the place where a cause of action must be deemed to arise, see notes to sects. 19 and 20, ante. The date of accrual is a question of substantive law; it should be given as correctly as practicable.(3) In the case cited, the suit was for possession, and it was held that the date of the plaintiff's dispossession must be given as accurately as possible, especially when one of the issues was whether he had been in possession within twelve years. As to relinquishment, see O. II. r. 2, ante, and as to set-off, O. VIII. r. 6, post.

Technical objections, however, should not, unless where it is absolutely necessary, be allowed to prevail. Thus where it was objected that a plaint had been drawn for rectification of a compromise instead of a decree, it was held that this was a mere technicality, since rectification of the decree would follow if the plaint was successful.(4) In the under-mentioned case,(5) Couch, C.J., said: "The plaint in this case is drawn, as so many plaints are, in a very improper manner with reference to the cause of suit, but this Court cannot allow a plaintiff to be defeated in his suit on account of the improper form of the plaint, if, looking at the whole of it, we can say what is the cause of suit. Of course we are not to allow a plaintiff to succeed upon a cause of action which is not in the plaint, but the language of these plaints is not to be read too strictly, and we certainly are not willing to give effect to any technical objections arising upon it." This and similar cases were decided many years ago, and stricter rules have been now enacted in O. VI. A document referred to in the plaint is not necessarily a part of it.(6)

Relief. Rule 1, clause (g).—The object of a suit is to obtain some particular remedy or relief. This is stated in the prayer of the plaint, for just as the defendant is entitled to know what facts the plaintiff relies on and intends to prove, in order that he may meet them, for the same reason he is entitled to know what use the plaintiff intends to make of his alleged facts; and the Court should know the nature of the plaintiff's demand, which, when obtained, is embodied in its judgment. In the corresponding provision of the New York Code, "judgment" is substituted for "relief" in order to exclude from the plaint prayers for provisional remedies which, it has been said, need not find room in it.(7) Mention need not be made in it of that which is machinery for the grant of the relief prayed for. Thus it has been held that a demand for money will include a prayer for its recovery by the sale of the property held in mortgage for it,(8) and it is not necessary to mention the sale in the plaint. In a suit for contribution, the amount due from each defendant should be specified; but where this cannot be done, the ascertainment of the amount should form a portion of the relief sought.(1) A suit, it was held, is often brought only for accounts, and a subsequent suit for the balance.(2) It is preferable and more convenient, however, that the suit should be not only for an account, but for an adjustment of accounts and for payment of the balance that may be found due. This is the usual practice on the Original Side of the Presidency High Courts; and it is specially desirable in regard to suits against agents in cases in which, as under Bengal Act VIII. of 1869, the period of limitation runs from the date of the termination of the agency; because the agent may make delay in giving the accounts, so that the subsequent suit for balance may be barred.(3) The object as to which a relief is claimed should be described with sufficient fulness, so that there may be no doubt or difficulty as to its identification. Thus, where the object of a suit is to prevent the plaintiff's rights over certain lands from being infringed upon, the boundaries of the lands should be given in the plaint.(4) See the new third rule in this Order and notes to O. XX. r. 9, post. But it has been held that a plaintiff's suit did not necessarily fail upon the ground that there were no boundaries given in the plaint when they asked merely for a declaratory decree in respect of their title.(5) And the mere omission from the schedule annexed to a plaint of the boundaries or other specifications of land will not exclude from the operation of the decree matters which are by name strictly claimed in the plaint, and referred to as such in the decree.(6) So, also, in a

The corresponding section (26) of the Code of 1859 expressly provided that "when the claim is for land, or for any interest in land, the nature of the tenure or interest must be specified; and if the claim be for land forming part of a village or other known division, or for a house, garden, or the like, its situation shall be described by the setting forth of boundaries, or in such other manner as may suffice for its identification." It has been pointed out (Hukm Chand, C. P. C. 616) that though it did not appear why this provision had been omitted in the Code of 1882, it was obviously desirable to have regard to it in the preparation of plaints, and to so describe the land to which the suit relates, that there might be no difficulty in its identification. And it was held under that Code, that where a small area of land within another area was claimed, the boundaries of the land claimed ought to be given: Mahomed Ismail v. Dhundur Kishore Narain, 25 W. R. 39 (1875); and that in a suit for a village, the plaintiff should make his plaint more precise by filing a survey map of villages: Ram Doyal Khan v. Ajoodhia Ram Khan, 11 C. 1 (1876). However, where the boundaries of one of the plots were not given, but determined by the Amin in the course of the inquiry, it was held that the suit could not be dismissed for the defect, though the plaint might have been returned for amendment: Jonab Ali v. Golam Assad, 21 W. R. 187 (1874). Where the plaint did not contain a specification of the quantity of land in the defendant's possession, it was held that the plaint might have been amended, but after the defendant had appeared the suit could not be dismissed on that ground: Syud Reza Ali v. Purnanund, 6 B. L. R. App. 84 (1870); it was also held sufficient so to describe the property as to identify it: Meer Ataboodeen v. Shumsoodeen, 18 W. R. 461 (1872). In the North-West the fields are numbered and their position is given, S. D. N. W. (1857), suit for obstruction to a private right of way, the plaint ought to show with reasonable precision and exactitude the termini of the right of way and the course which it takes.(1)

It has been held that alternative reliefs inconsistent with each other may be demanded, there being nothing in the Code against the joinder of such reliefs.(2) In the case cited, the plaintiff prayed to be declared the proprietor of the whole village, and, failing that, to be declared its occupancy tenant; and it was held that the plaint could not be returned for amendment, though, if it became necessary to consider whether the second relief could not be granted for want of jurisdiction in a Civil Court, the suit might have to be dismissed.

It is usual to insert a prayer for such further and other relief, than the specific relief claimed, as the Court may hold the plaintiff entitled to. A plaintiff may in such case have relief according to what he has alleged and proved. The prayer for general relief will support any relief consistent with the case made in the plaint, provided that there is no surprise on the defendants, and that they suffer no inconvenience by it.(3) So under the general prayer the Court has granted an injunction.(4) But under a prayer for general relief a plaintiff is not entitled to any relief which is inconsistent with his plaint.(5) It must be considered as limited by the facts alleged and by the prayer for express relief.(6) Under r. 7 it is not now necessary to ask for general relief.

Relief not founded on the pleadings should not, as a rule, be granted. But where substantial matters which constituted the title of all the parties are touched in the issues, and have been fully put in evidence and formed the main subject of discussion and decision in the Courts, the case does not come within the rule, and a declaration of the rights of the parties, though not founded on the pleadings, may be made.(7)

Mesne profits.—This clause does not apply where mesne profits are claimed only from the date of the suit.(8)

Suit as representative (Rule 4).—Whether the suit is brought by the plaintiff in his personal or representative capacity must be determined from the statements in the plaint, and not merely from the words indicative of the capacity in the title. So where the averments in, and the frame of, a plaint are such as to affix to the plaintiff a representative character, and to show that a cause of action, if any, devolved upon him solely in that character, the omission in the title of the word "as" between the name of the plaintiff and the words descriptive of his representative capacity, will not be deemed to negative his claiming in that capacity.(1)

The plaint must show not only an actual existing interest, but also that the plaintiff has taken the steps necessary to enable him to sue. The Indian Succession Act of 1865 (sect. 187) provides that no right as executor or legatee can be established without probate or letters of administration, and (sect. 190) no right to an intestate's property can be established without letters of administration. As regards, however, Hindus and Mahomedans, neither of whom are governed by this Act, the general rule is that there is no law which obliges a person claiming under a will to obtain probate.(2) Nor generally are letters of administration necessary. Upon this general rule, however, are engrafted two special provisions. Sect. 187 has since been embodied in the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, but it was excluded from the Probate Act, 1881. The result is, that sect. 187 applies to cases governed by the Hindu Wills Act, but does not apply to wills executed by Mahomedans or by those Hindus who are not governed by the Hindu Wills Act, and an executor of theirs can sue without taking out probate.(3) Further, no Court can pass a decree against a debtor (4) of a deceased person or proceed to execute a decree against such debtor except upon the production of probate, letters of administration, or certificate mentioned in the Succession Certificate Act.(5) A certificate may be obtained in respect of particular debts due to a deceased person, as distinguished from probate or letters of administration, which create a representative title to recover all the effects of such person.(1) It is not necessary for the institution of a suit that the plaintiff should have taken out a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act.(2) The Act, however, enacts that no Court can "pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debts to a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person or to any part thereof" unless he has obtained a certificate under the Act. The Courts have construed this provision so as to hold that, unless the certificate is produced, a decree may not be passed even with the defendant's consent; (3) nor in a suit in which a partner of the deceased has joined the legal representative of the latter; (4) or even when the suit is brought solely by an assignee of the legal representative,(5) for the assignee is in no better position than the assignor. It is quite sufficient, however, that the certificate is obtained and produced in the Court after the institution of the suit during the course of the proceedings. And this is so also in the case of a suit continued by a legal representative. Administration is not necessary for revival.(6) And where a certificate was granted by a Court in a native State, and a true copy of it signed by the Political Agent of the State, and stamped with the court-fee required by the Court Fees Act, was produced by the plaintiff, but there was nothing to show that the Political Agent intended to grant a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, it was held that though a decree should not have been granted, yet time should have been allowed for the production of a proper certificate.(7) It is doubtful whether the Act applies to the case of a person who has been substituted as plaintiff for one who, having taken out a certificate, has died pending the suit.(8) See also next paragraph.

Defendant's liability to be shown (Rule 5).—A suit against Mrs. S. G. B., Mussoorie, which stated in the body of the plaint that she was executrix of the debtor, is a suit against her as executrix.(9) Where a defendant is liable as a representative of another, the fact of his liability as a representative should be stated clearly in the plaint; as the effect of a sale in execution of a decree is limited to the judgment-debtor's interest, where it does not appear on the face of the proceedings that he was sued in a representative capacity; and it is only in cases where it is manifest that the judgment-debtor must have been sued as a representative, that a sale in terms of the interests of the judgment-debtor is allowed to convey the interests of other persons.(10)

The liability of the legal representative of a deceased debtor to be sued is absolute, and not dependent on the assets having come into his hands; it being sufficient to give a decree against him that there are assets of which he may have become possessed, though he will be liable under the decree only as a legal representative.(1) A decree obtained against a brother and an aunt of the deceased debtor, and proceedings taken in execution against them, will give to the plaintiff no title to the property forming the estate; and if after the sale a person takes letters of administration to the deceased, he will be entitled to the proceeds of the sale in execution held by the Court in preference to the decree-holder.(2) In Baswantapa v. Ranu,(3) it was held that a decree against a person who is not an heir of the deceased, and even a sale in execution of such a decree, can give no right to the decree-holder, or to the purchaser at the execution-sale, to the property which belonged to the deceased or to his real heir or legal representative. In a suit by a creditor against the estate of a deceased debtor who has died leaving a will, his heirs in intestacy do not represent his estate, and the suit is bad unless the estate is represented.(4) If a Hindu sues as representing a joint family he should state it in the plaint.(5) And a widow, if sued as representative of her deceased husband, should be so described.(6) And this is a general rule where a person is sued as a representative, as where defendants are sued as representatives of a tarwad.(7) A decree against a Hindu widow may bind a son adopted during the litigation, but not brought on the record.(8) On the death of one member of a joint Hindu family subject to Mitakshara law, his widow cannot represent him so as to make the joint property liable to his debts.(9) As to widow's estate in moveables inherited from her husband, and the liability of such property for her debts after her death, see below.(10)

Limitation (Rule 6).—This rule recognizes the principle, that a plaintiff must not only show that he has a title, but that he has a subsisting title, which he has not lost by the prescriptive sections of the Limitation Act.(11) It has been said that under this provision, a plaintiff cannot take advantage of any ground of exemption from the law of limitation which has not been set up in the plaint.(12) But it has been recently held that this is not an inflexible rule. If the plaint shows the ground of exemption, the requirements of the Code are satisfied; but the plaintiff is not precluded from taking another and an inconsistent ground to get over the bar of limitation if he believes that the latter is the true ground.(1)

Relief to be specifically stated.

7. Every plaint shall state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims either simply or in the alternative, and it shall not be necessary to ask for general or other relief, which may always be given as the Court may think just, to the same extent as if it had been asked for. And the same rule shall apply to any relief claimed by the defendant in his written statement.

Relief.—This rule is new, and is taken from English O. 20, r. 6. The plaintiff should always claim in the one action every kind of relief to which he is entitled—be it damages or an injunction, a declaration or a receiver, for he will not be allowed to bring a second suit on the same cause of action to obtain relief which he might have obtained in the first action.(2) A Court in refusing a decree for specific performance may give a decree for the refund of the deposit with interest, though the plaintiff had not sought this alternative relief.(3) In a suit for the sale of mortgaged property, the Court may (in certain circumstances) pass a decree for redemption.(4) As regards prayer for general relief, see notes to preceding rules.

Relief founded on separate grounds.

8. Where the plaintiff seeks relief in respect of several distinct claims or causes of action founded upon separate and distinct grounds, they shall be stated, as far as may be, separately and distinctly.

Separate grounds.—This rule is new, and is the first sentence of English O. 20, r. 7.

Procedure on admitting plaint.

9. (1) The plaintiff shall endorse on the plaint, or annex thereto, a list of the documents (if any) which he has produced along with it; and, if the plaint is admitted, shall present as many copies on plain paper of the plaint as there are defendants, unless the Court by reason of the length of the plaint or the number of the defendants, or for any other sufficient reason, permits him to present a like number of concise statements of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief claimed in the suit, in which case he shall present such statements.

Return of plaint.

(2) On returning a plaint the Judge shall endorse thereon the date of its presentation and return, the name of the party presenting it, and a brief statement of the reasons for returning it.

Procedure on returning plaint.

When plaint may be returned.—The words of the rule are imperative.(1) The section which this rule replaces did not, however, state at what stage of the suit the order could be made. The section itself was differently construed as applicable to any stage of the suit, and as referring merely to the time of presentation. The Calcutta High Court held that its provisions might be put in force at any stage of the hearing, and that it is not limited to the time of presentation, or before the defendant has been called on to state his case, for the objection, if to valuation, would not appear upon the face of the plaint itself, but would naturally come from the defendant. Therefore, a Court was held to have erred which, after hearing the evidence on both sides, found that the suit had been undervalued, but instead of returning the plaint dismissed the suit.(2) It has thus been held that the plaint should be returned, and the suit not dismissed after evidence in the first Court; (3) and after trial in the first Appellate Court, or even in the High Court itself.(1) The same views were entertained by the Madras High Court.(2) The Bombay (3) and Allahabad (4) High Courts held, that while the section, corresponding to this rule, only contemplates the return of a plaint, should error be patent when it is first presented, yet there was nothing in the Code which forbade the return of a plaint at a later stage after the plaint has been admitted and the trial begun, or even concluded, it being a general principle that a Court, on finding, whenever that may be, that it has not jurisdiction, should decline to proceed further in a cause placed before it. The shape, however, in which a suit is originally instituted is the test of jurisdiction, and a Court, after exercising jurisdiction by amending the plaint, cannot afterwards aver want of jurisdiction with regard to the plaint so amended.(5) The words "at any stage of the hearing" have now been inserted and remove all doubt on the question raised in the cases cited.

The former section was held, however, not to apply to High Courts in the exercise of their original jurisdiction. The practice on the Original Side of the High Court at Bombay has been to retain a plaint when further proceedings in a suit have been stopped for want of jursdiction, and a plaint is not returned except when, on presentation, the Judge is of opinion that it discloses no cause of action, or, it appears to him, that the suit ought to be brought in another Court.(6) A similar practice prevails in the Calcutta High Court.

It was held, prior to the Limitation Act, that the date of a suit must be taken to be that on which the plaint was originally filed, and not that on which it was filed in another Court as a plaint returned to be filed in that Court.(7) It has been held that where a Court returns a plaint under this rule the Court to which the plaint is afterwards presented is bound to give credit for the fee levied in the first instance.(8) When a plaint has been returned the suit when presented to the proper Court is a new suit and not a continuation of the former proceeding.(1)

"Should have been instituted."—In the Code of 1882 specific cases were mentioned in which the Court might return a plaint. Where, however, a lower Court rejected a suit, but refused to return a plaint on the ground that the case did not fall within the provisions of this section, it was held, on appeal, that the circumstances of the case came within clauses (a) and (c) of the corresponding section of the Code of 1882; but even were it not so, in every case where the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit the proper procedure was to return the plaint.(2) This is now made clear, the second set of italicized words in the first clause being substituted in lieu of the specific clauses (a), (b), (c) of the last Code.

Appeal.—An appeal lies under O. XLIII. r. 1 (a). Under the circumstances of the case cited,(3) a party was held estopped from appealing against an order returning the plaint.

11. The plaint shall be rejected in the following cases :—

Rejection of plaint.

(a) where it does not disclose a cause of action;

(b) where the relief claimed is undervalued, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so :

(c) where the relief claimed is properly valued, but the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp-paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so :

(d) where the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred by any law.

Applicability of rule.—It was held that clauses (b) and (c) did not apply to High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction.(4) An opinion was also expressed that they did not apply to the High Courts in their appellate jurisdiction.(5) But sect. 582A was, since that decision, added to the Code of 1882 by Act VI. of 1892. See now sect. 149, ante.

Rejected.—Clause (a) is taken from sect. 53 of the last Code. The Court must see whether a cause of action is disclosed in the plaint. Firstly, as to the mode in which this is to be done. Apparently this is to be ascertained from a reading of the plaint itself. The Code of 1859 provided (6) for rejection, if upon the face of the plaint, or after questioning the plaintiff,(1) it appeared that there was no cause of action, or that the right of action was barred.(2) It was held that for this purpose the Court should not refer to documents or facts not stated in nor annexed to the plaint (a ruling which equally applies now), nor ascertained by it (under the practice which then prevailed), by interrogation of the plaintiff.(3)

The Court has then merely to see whether there is a question to be tried. The rule does not contemplate any forms of action, but requires only that a plaint should contain facts describing a cause of action, and a plaint that does so must be heard.(4) The facts must be so alleged that all the constituent facts may be implied, and unless this is so there will be no cause of action disclosed.(5) A cause of action is deemed stated whenever sufficient facts to sustain an action "can be fairly gathered from all the averments in the complaint, though the statement of them may be argumentative, and the complaint deficient in technical language." (6) Insufficiency can only be sustained "when it appears that, admitting all the facts alleged, the complaint presents no cause of action whatever. It is not sufficient that the facts are imperfectly or informally averred, or that the pleading lacks definiteness and precision, or that the material facts are argumentatively averred." The plaint is deemed to allege what can be implied from the allegations therein by reasonable and fair intendment.(7) So a cause of action will be considered disclosed if there are sufficient facts stated to warrant an inference as to its existence, even though all the facts constituting it may not be expressly stated.(8)

A plaint may be rejected if it does not disclose a cause of action against any of the defendants, unless the plaintiff amends by striking off the name of that defendant;(9) and if it is presented by a person not authorized to do so.(10) The Court, however, cannot reject a plaint on the ground that the plaintiff is not likely to succeed; (11) not on any ground except that of want of cause of action.(1) The existence or non-existence of a cause of action depends on the provisions of the substantive law applicable. If the plaint discloses a cause of action, but it is barred, it should be rejected under rule 11, clause (d). If no cause of action is disclosed, the plaint might have been rejected under the last Code, if this was done before the issues were settled. Rule 11 contains no limit of time. And the order may apparently be made at any time. The plaint should not be returned for amendment.(2) There would, however, appear to be no objection to the Court amending itself the plaint on the spot,(3) though in a large number of cases this may not be found to be practicable. According to the practice of the Original Side of the High Court, the sufficiency of a plaint is allowed to be discussed after it has been filed, on an application made by the defendant to take it off the file.(4) It was held under the last Code that the original Court might not reject or return a plaint for amendment after the settlement of the issues, but where it had proceeded to the trial of the suit should dispose of it on the merits.(5) If a plaint is not rejected before settlement of issues, and it is then discovered not to allege a cause of action, the Court should either amend it under clause (c) of sect. 53 of the last Code or determine the case on the evidence.(6) In the latter event it would, if the plaint and evidence disclose no cause of action, dismiss the suit.(7) If the plaint does not disclose a cause of action, but the Court does not reject it on that ground, an objection may be taken for the first time on appeal; (8) though if the appeal is from a decision on the merits, the Appellate Court cannot dismiss the suit simply on the ground that the plaint discloses no cause of action, if such a cause is shown by the evidence on the record.(9) Nor can the Appellate Court dismiss a suit merely on the ground that the plaint does not show how far the several parties sued for contribution are individually liable, if the evidence produced is enough to determine that. The real test in such cases being whether the

In Luckymonee Dossie v. Khetter Coomary, 2 Ind. Jur. N. Judge, after the adjudication of the case, can pass a decree which shall operate as one against each party sought to be made liable for his respective quota.(1) Where the plaint does not disclose a cause of action the proper order to be passed on appeal, where the suit is dismissed without taking evidence in the first Court, is to reject the plaint and not dismiss the suit so that the plaintiff can present a fresh plaint if he subsequently should find himself in a position to make averments which would give relevancy to his action.(2) For it is to be noted that rejection is distinct from dismissal, inasmuch as the former, according to O. VII. r. 13, leaves the plaintiff free to present a fresh plaint, while the latter would ordinarily bar a new suit. It was held under the former section that a Court could not reject a plaint in part.(3)

Form of Order.—Rejection of the plaint, and not dismissal of the suit, is the proper order to pass.(4) In a suit in a Munsif's Court it was found, after issues were fixed and some evidence recorded, that the claim had been under-valued, and that if properly valued it would be beyond the Court's jurisdiction; it was held that the proper order was to reject the plaint and return it, so that the plaintiff might add the additional stamps required and sue in the proper Court.(5)

When order may be made.—A plaint can be rejected after it has been registered, and at any stage of the suit; (6) but not after the case has been finally decided, so far as the Court is concerned.(7)

Clauses (b), (c).—It is competent to a Court to reject after it has been admitted and registered.(8) The power of rejection given by this section does not arise merely because the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped; but there must be the additional circumstance of a failure on the part of the plaintiff to supply the requisite stamp paper within the period fixed.(9) Reading this section with sect. 12 of the Court Fees Act of 1870, the Court is not justified in rejecting a plaint without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of affixing the proper stamp.(10) Quære, whether "insufficiently stamped" in clause (c) refers to or includes a wholly unstamped paper.(11) See also next paragraph. deficit Court-fee be not put in within the time allowed by the Court, the latter ought to reject the plaint. But if on the date on which the deficit Court-fee is ultimately put in, the suit is not barred, the plaint may be regarded as if it was presented for the first time on that date, and the suit ought to be proceeded with.(1)

"Time to be fixed."—The time fixed for making up stamp-duty on a plaint may extend beyond the period of limitation for the suit. If a plaint improperly stamped is given back to have a proper stamp fixed, the date of the suit is the date on which it was filed,(2) and therefore no question of limitation can arise. There is nothing in the Code to render a presentation ineffectual because the plaint was insufficiently stamped.(3) The view, however, has also been expressed that the presentation of an insufficiently stamped document, which if sufficiently stamped could be treated as a plaint, cannot be regarded as the institution of a suit within the meaning of sect. 4 of the Limitation Act, or of the Code.(4) Therefore, when a Court fixes a time under clauses (b) or (c) of this section, it must be a time within limitation, and this section does not give a Court power to extend the ordinarily prescribed period of limitation for suit.(5) But in a recent case in the Bombay High Court where a memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped was filed on the last day allowed by the law of limitation and the Court refused time to pay and rejected the memorandum, this order was reversed on appeal, and it was held that the Court had a discretion under sect. 149, limited only by clause (c) of this rule.(6) Apart from the question of limitation, the Court can extend the period originally, granted after the time originally fixed has expired.(7) If, however, the order is not complied with within the time allowed, the plaint will be rejected. So a plaint was filed one day before the expiry of the period of limitation, but the Court-fees were deficient and the plaintiff was ordered to pay the deficient Court-fees within a week. This order was complied with one day after the expiry of the time allowed and the plaint was registered. Held, that the suit was barred by limitation, as the deficient Court-fees were not supplied within the appointed time, and that the fact of the plaint being registered did not prevent its rejection under sect. 54 (corresponding with this rule), the terms of which are imperative and mandatory.(1) It has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that the suit is not barred by limitation if the deficiency is supplied within the time fixed by the Court after the expiry of the period of limitation.(2)

Clause (d).—The words of the rule are imperative. So the plaintiff is bound to satisfy the Court that his right of action is not barred.(3) The Court also is bound to take notice of such a bar, if it exists.(4) So far as rejection under this rule is concerned, it is incumbent only when "from the statement on the plaint" the suit appears to be barred.(5)

Where a plaint in a Civil Court alleges facts which, if true, would show that the dispute or matter involved in the suit was one to which sect. 93 or sect. 95 of Act XII. of 1881 would apply, the plaint should be rejected under clause (d) of this rule, or possibly in some cases returned under O. VII. r. 10.(6) The language of sect. 80 is imperative, and absolutely debars a Court from entertaining a suit instituted without compliance with the provisions of the section. A Court cannot, under such circumstances, stay proceedings and allow time to the plaintiff to serve the requisite notice, but its only course is to reject the plaint under clause (a) of the rule.(7) Where the plaintiff sued to establish a mul-raiyati right which by a Government order was not granted, and also sought for the position of a mustajir and to set aside the executive orders of the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner, and the lower Courts rejected the plaint under sect. 54 (the present rule): held, that upon the allegations made in the plaint the suit ought to have been tried and the plaint could not be rejected on the ground of the suit being barred by any positive rule of law.(8)

No rejection in other cases.—Neither this nor any other rule authorizes the dismissal of a suit on the ground that the land in dispute as described in the plaint cannot be identified.(9) It was even held, in the under-mentioned case,(10) that the plaint ought not to have been rejected. The actual decision may be supported on the ground that the identification was in fact held to be sufficient; but apart from this the order was in form as the plaint had been returned for amendment and was refiled without amendment. A plaint should not be rejected because a wrong date is given for the cause of action.

Provided the action is not barred, it should be amended ; (1) as also where in a suit for a kabulyat the date of the commencement of the kabulyat is not given.(2) A plaint should not be rejected or the suit dismissed simply because strictly accurate language has not been used in describing the cause of action ; (3) nor because costs in respect of a former suit have not been paid ; (4) nor because the document on which plaintiff sues has not been filed with the plaint ; (5) nor if presented to the wrong Court, for in that case it should be returned.(6)

Appeal from order rejecting plaint.—An order rejecting a plaint is a decree,(7) and is therefore appealable unless there is any statutory prohibition to the contrary.(8) Whether there is such a prohibition depends upon the construction to be placed on sect. 12 of the Court Fees Act (VII. of 1870), which enacts that "every question relating to valuation" shall be decided by the Court in which a plaint or memorandum of appeal is filed, and such decision shall be final as between the parties to the suit. According to one view which has been taken, it was the intention of the framers of the Code that whenever a plaint is rejected under this section, and in every case falling within it, there is an appeal,(9) the Court Fees Act not contemplating a case when the Court refuses to hear a suit.(10) Therefore when a plaint is rejected under this rule, either because the relief sought is undervalued or because although the relief sought being properly valued a sufficient Court-fee stamp has not been paid, there is an appeal.(11) This view appears to proceed on the ground that the Code has removed the finality declared by sect. 12 of the Court Fees Act.(12) According to another view which has been taken, the operation of sect. 12 of the Court Fees Act is not affected by the Code, but in certain cases there is no "question relating to valuation" within the meaning of that section, and there is therefore an appeal under sect. 96 of the Code.(13) It has thus been held that the Court Fees Act applies merely to decisions as to the valuation of a suit in a particular class when there is no question of the article in the schedule governing the case, but that an appeal lies against a decision as to the class to which a suit belongs, and therefore à fortiori when a plaint is rejected or a suit dismissed, on this ground sect. 96 has operation, there being no prohibition to the contrary.(1) The Bombay High Court, doubting the distinction drawn in the first of the Madras cases cited, has said that where there really is a valuation to be made by a Judge in order to determine a variable proportional fee, it cannot be said that his reasoned choice amongst the several categories of suits is not as essential an element of his valuation as the subsequent arithmetical computation by which it is completed; and that where the Judge can enter on a valuation at all, the determination of the one factor, as much as of the other, must be a "question relating to valuation," and as such a question closed as between the parties by the Judge's decision.(2) But in some cases under the Court Fees Act a suit is one admitting of valuation by a Judge, in other cases the valuation rests with the plaintiff. Again, in some cases the fee is ad valorem, thus admitting an inquiry by the Court, in other cases the fee is fixed. The cases therefore where a Judge can enter on a valuation are quite different from those where an inquiry is quite gratuitously entered into, either because the matter rests in the discretion of the plaintiff or because the fee is fixed.(3) The Bombay High Court has therefore held that on the question whether or not any particular suit was one admitting of valuation by the Judge an appeal lies.(4) An appeal has also been allowed where the Court of first instance rejected the plaint without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of affixing the proper stamp.(5) In a suit for taking accounts valued at Rs.130, it was held that the appeal from the order, rejecting the plaint, lay to the District and not the High Court.(6) Where excess stamps have been filed in consequence of an overvaluation of the appeal the surplus amount should be refunded.(7)

(13) See Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Nath, 12 A. 129 (1890), at p. 153, where it was pointed out that what the class of cases next referred to decide, is that a question of category is not a question "relating to valuation," and therefore not one declared to be final.

Revision.—A decision on valuation was, notwithstanding its declared finality, formerly held subject to revision.(8)

13. The rejection of the plaint on any of the grounds hereinbefore mentioned shall not of its own force preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action.

Where rejection of plaint does not preclude presentation of fresh plaint.

Effect of rejection.—The rule, which corresponds with sect. 36 of the Code of 1859, and sect. 56 of the last Code, says, "of its own force." The claim may, however, of course, become, after rejection, barred by lapse of time.(1) It is to be observed that the rule applies to rejection on any of the grounds hereinbefore mentioned—that is, the grounds in r. 11. It has been held that where a plaint has been rejected for default of appearance in the Mamlatdar's Court under sect. 13, Bombay Act III. of 1876, the rule of res judicatâ applies.(2) Such a rejection is analogous rather to the procedure under O. IX. r. 9.

Documents relied on in plaint.

(2) Where he relies on any other documents (whether in his possession or power or not) as evidence in support of his claim, he shall enter such documents in a list to be added or annexed to the plaint.

Document sued upon.—This is a very wise provision, its object being to prevent the dishonest fabrication of documents,(3) and to give the defendant notice of the documents relied on so as to enable him to reply to the claim.(4) All documents sued upon must be produced, such as pottah (5) and title-deeds.(6) A defendant is entitled under the Madras High Court Rules to be furnished with a copy of documents sued on, which are deposited with the plaint.(7) It was held in an early case,(8) that all documents delivered should be received and filed with the plaint, though, if not admissible in evidence, they will afterwards be rejected and returned. And the law is still the same, that the mere production or filing of a document does not operate as its admission in evidence, and that it will not be put on the record unless it is duly admitted in accordance with the rules prescribed.

Document relied on.—The rule requires a plaintiff to file with his plaint a list of all the documents on which he relies; that is, which he is then in a position to know to be essential to his case, whether in his possession or power, or not.(1) These words will therefore [as they now expressly state, and was formerly held (2) under the corresponding sect. 39, clause (1) of the Code of 1859] include all the documents the plaintiff intends to use in evidence, and not only those which are the essence of the claim and on which the suit is based,(3) which are provided for by the first paragraph. They do not include, however, documents tendered merely for comparison of handwriting.(4)

Penalty.—The penalty for not producing these documents when called on to do so is not the rejection of the plaint, but that prescribed in r. 18. viz. not being able to put them in without the special leave of the Judge.(5)

Inspection.—The Bombay High Court has held that it has not been the practice to order the plaintiff to give inspection of documents other than those relied on in the plaint, and included in the list of documents annexed to the plaint as required by this rule, till after the written statement is filed; but that this is not, however, an inflexible rule in all cases. There may be cases where it would be imperative to order the plaintiff to produce and give inspection to the defendant of a document which he may not have mentioned in the plaint or enumerated in the list of documents annexed thereto.(6)

Production of shop-book.

17. (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1891, where the document on which the plaintiff sues is an entry in a shop-book or other account in his possession or power, the plaintiff shall produce the book or account at the time of filing the plaint, together with a copy of the entry on which he relies.

Original entry to be marked and returned.

(2) The Court, or such officer as it appoints in this behalf, shall forthwith mark the document for the purpose of identification; and, after examining and comparing the copy with the original, shall, if it is found correct, certify it to be so and return the book to the plaintiff and cause the copy to be filed.

Production.—It was held that sect. 39 of Act VIII. of 1859, which corresponds with this rule, did not require the Court to inspect the document, but only that it should be marked for identification and the copy compared with the original.(1) If the book is not produced before the suit is registered, but a day is fixed for its production, the Court cannot, even on a contumacious non-production of it, reject the plaint, the only effect of the non-production being that provided in the next rule as to the inadmissibility of the book in evidence at any subsequent stage.(2)

Inadmissibility of document not produced when plaint filed.

18. (1) A document which ought to be produced in Court by the plaintiff when the plaint is presented, or to be entered in the list to be added or annexed to the plaint, and which is not produced or entered accordingly, shall not, without the leave of the Court, be received in evidence on his behalf at the hearing of the suit.

(2) Nothing in this rule applies to documents produced for cross-examination of the defendant's witnesses, or in answer to any case set up by the defendant or handed to a witness merely to refresh his memory.

Scope of rule.—This rule is intended not to prevent a person from commencing his suit until he has collected all his documentary evidence, but merely to place a check upon the fabrication of evidence by excluding documents not produced in the first instance unless a good and sufficient reason is given for their non-production at that time; and therefore if a document is not produced or entered in the list, the plaint itself cannot be rejected.(3)

"Shall not."—The words are imperative,(1) and prohibit a plaintiff from using any document which he ought to have, but did not produce or enter ; (2) unless the Court exercises the discretion given to it under this rule.(3) But, as already stated, if a document is not produced or entered, the plaint itself cannot be rejected.(4)

"Leave."—Where documents were referred to an Ameen to inspect, and were ultimately acted upon by the Court, this was held to be abundant proof of "sanction," the term used in the Code of 1859.(5) It is a sufficient reason for the grant of leave that the plaintiff was in ignorance of the existence of the document when the plaint was filed ; (6) that the document was with the Collector, to whom it had been sent for the purpose of being stamped ; (7) or that the Court is satisfied of its bonâ fide nature and reliableness ; (8) or if there is no doubt of the existence of the document at the date of suit.(9) The question of reception is one of discretion, which will not be interfered with on appeal.(10) Where, however, khusra papers which formed the very essence of the action were not filed or produced, the Court was held to have been justified in rejecting them when subsequently tendered in evidence.(11)

"Received in evidence."—Merely giving a document to a witness to refresh his memory is not receiving it in evidence, for a document may be so used which is not evidence in itself.(12) Such a document is therefore expressly excluded from the section.

Appeal.—The reception of evidence afterwards with leave is not a ground of appeal.(13) The admission is conclusive even when no reasons are given, and the Appellate Court cannot refuse to consider the admitted documents as evidence ; (14) though, of course, the Appeal Court may attach such weight to the document as it thinks proper, or say whether it ought to be treated as evidence as against particular parties to the suit.(15) But the refusal to receive a document may be a good ground of appeal.(16)

ORDER VIII.

Written Statement and Set-off.

Written statement.

1. The defendant may, and if so required by the Court, shall at or before the first hearing or within such time as the Court may permit, present a written statement of his defence.

"The defendant."—The rule has been reconstructed and shortened. It formerly commenced "The parties." Ordinarily this was the defendant. But a plaintiff may, after he has filed a plaint, put in a written statement, or it may be called for by the Court under r. 9, post. A Court has no authority to receive a written statement in a suit from one who is not a party, or to permit such a person to appear at the hearing.(1) A third party will not be allowed to file a statement for a plaintiff or defendant who has neglected to do so himself.(2) But if the parties are present in person or by pleader, the mere fact that the defendant has not filed a written statement does not warrant the trial of the suit ex parte.(3) As to the presumption of authenticity, see below.(4) The corresponding section to this in the Code of 1859 was sect. 120.

"At or before the first hearing."—See notes to r. 9, post. Under the Code of 1859 the word "before" did not occur, and it was therefore held that the admission of written statements on several dates was wrong.(5) Written statements may now be received at any time, provided it is before the first hearing or by order of Court under rr. 6 and 9. Reasonable time should be given to a defendant to file his written statement.(6)

"Present."—The word formerly used was "tender." The production of the written statement at the trial was held (7) to be the tendering under the Code of 1859. But now it would appear to be the presentation of the written statement, whenever that may be.

"Written statement."—It has been said that English rules are to be applied with discretion in this country, where a strict system of pleading has not hitherto been followed; but here, as everywhere, the first object of pleading is to inform the persons against whom the suit is directed what the charge is that is laid against them. The principle is equally valid as applied to either party in the cause. Amendments have, however, now been introduced into the Code to secure a stricter and more accurate system of pleading. Under O. XIV. r. 3, post, the Court frames the issues according to the allegations in the plaint and written statement.(1) As to the nature of a written statement, see notes to O. VI. r. 2. The effect of a written statement may be considered from the point of view of the plaintiff or defendant. As regards the former, he has to prove his case. He may, however, be dispensed from doing this, in whole or in part, by the admission of the defendant. What is not admitted must be proved.(2) An admission may not only operate to relieve the plaintiff in his proof, but it may shift the burden to the defendant.(3) It has sometimes been supposed that no portion of a defendant's written statement can be read against him without the whole statement being read. The true rule, however, is this: that if a man makes a qualified statement (4) you cannot use the statement against him apart from the qualification; not that if a man makes a series of independent unqualified statements any particular one of those statements cannot be used against him.(5) A written statement cannot, of course, be read against any party save him by whom it has been made or those who are bound by his admission.(6) An admission by one defendant does not bind the others.(7) Looking at the matter from the point of view of the defendant, the written statement is, of course, not evidence so as to dispense the defendant from proving the facts stated; (8) nor is it evidence in the defendant's favour, so that if a defendant admits one fact, and thereby dispenses with proof of it, he is not entitled to say that the plaintiff has relied on his statement as evidence, and that he, the defendant, is in consequence in a position to claim that the whole of it may be read as evidence in his favour.(9) Pleadings in Indian Courts have not hitherto been construed with the same strictness as pleadings in English Courts,(1) and therefore a mere omission to deny an allegation has not always been taken as an admission of it so as to dispense the plaintiff from proof of the fact alleged.(2) Stricter rules have now been introduced (see O. VIII. r. 5). As against the party affected his statement primarily operates by way of admission and not estoppel.(3) If a party wishes to give evidence of a fact of which he became aware after he has filed his plaint or written statement, as the case may be, he should file a written statement or supplementary written statement before the hearing.(4) If leave is given to file a further written statement on or before a particular date, it will not, if filed after that date, be ordered to be taken off the file if the opposite party has delayed to make an application until the trial.(5) Where an additional written statement sought to be admitted was inconsistent with the original written statement, the Court said that in such cases there was a difference between an application by the plaintiff and by the defendant. The plaintiff would not be allowed to file such a statement. It allowed the filing on payment of all costs, observing, however, that the supplementary written statement would rightly be the subject of strong comment at the hearing.(6) The Code, it was held, did not contemplate the filing by a plaintiff of a written statement after seeing the written statement of the defendant and by way of rejoinder thereto (7); but rr. 6 and 9 refer to written statements in answer to claims of set-off. A written statement, whether it be called for by the Court after the first hearing or is filed by the parties under this rule at or before the first hearing, need not be stamped.(8)

New facts must be specially pleaded.

2. The defendant must raise by his pleadings all matters which show the suit not to be maintainable, or that the transaction is either void or voidable in point of law, and all such grounds of defence as, if not raised, would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise issues of fact not arising out of the plaint, as, for instance, fraud, limitation, release, payment, performance, or facts showing illegality.

Specially pleaded.—"It often is not enough for a party to deny an allegation in his opponent's pleading; he must go further and dispute its validity in law, or set up some affirmative case of his own, in answer to it. In the technical language of the old pleaders, it will not serve his turn to merely traverse the allegation; he must confess and avoid. Thus, if the plaintiff sets up a contract which was in fact made, it will be idle for the defendant merely to traverse (i.e. deny) the making of the contract; he should confess (i.e. admit) that he made the contract, but avoid the effect of that confession by pleading the Statute of Frauds or Limitations, or setting up that the contract has been duly performed or rescinded. A defendant, however, is not bound to admit an allegation which he seeks thus to avoid, or which he alleges to be bad in law. He may at the same time deny its truth, so long as he makes it quite clear how much he is denying. He may, indeed, take all three courses at once; the allegation may be traversed in point of fact, and objected to as bad in law, and at the same time collateral matter may be pleaded to destroy its effect. Any number of defences may now be pleaded together in the same action without leave, although they are obviously inconsistent." (1) A defendant may "raise by his defence, without leave, as many distinct and separate, and therefore inconsistent, defences as he may think proper, subject only to the provision" (2) contained in O. VI. r. 16, as to striking out embarrassing matter. And a defence is not embarrassing merely because it contains inconsistent averments.(3) But all these various defences must be clearly and distinctly pleaded and the facts upon which each is grounded should be stated separately. As a rule each defence should form a separate paragraph. The defendant must make it quite clear what line of defence he is adopting. Any plea which wears a doubtful aspect will be struck out as embarrassing.(4) Above all, special defences of this kind must not be mixed up with traverses or insinuated into pleas which deny the facts alleged by the plaintiff.(5) "The office of a traverse is to contradict, not to excuse or justify, the act complained of; its object is to compel the plaintiff to prove the truth of the allegation traversed, not to dispute its sufficiency in point of law. All matter in confession and avoidance, all matter justifying or excusing the act complained of must be specially and separately pleaded; so must all matters which go to show that the contract sued on is illegal or invalid, or which, if not expressly stated, would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise issues of fact not arising out of the preceding pleadings. And no evidence of such matters can be given at the trial if they be not expressly pleaded. This is only fair play." (6)

Denial to be specific.

3. It shall not be sufficient for a defendant in his written statement to deny generally the grounds alleged by the plaintiff, but the defendant must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth, except damages.

"It shall not be sufficient."—This is one of the greatest improvements introduced by the Judicature Act. Formerly the defendant was allowed to plead what was called "the general issue," i.e. "that he was not guilty," or "that he never was indebted as alleged," both of which were conclusions of mixed law and fact. Now a defendant may no longer deny generally the facts alleged in the Statement of Claim. He must take each matter which is alleged against him separately, and either admit it, or deny it, or say that he does not admit it. "It is not merely denial which is meant; the rule covers non-admission" as well. Whether the defendant says "I deny" or "I do not admit," he is equally bound to deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth.(1) This is the general principle which now governs every traverse. And in order to make this general principle quite clear, special instances are given in subsequent rules (English).(2) "In actions for a debt or liquidated demand in money, comprised in O. 3, r. 6 (English), a mere denial of the debt shall be inadmissible" (English O. 21, r. 1). "In actions upon bills of exchange, promissory notes, or cheques, a defence in denial must deny some matter of fact, e.g. the drawing, making, endorsing, accepting, presenting or notice of dishonour of the bill or note" (English O. 21, r. 2). "In actions for goods bargained and sold, or sold and delivered, the defence must deny the order or contract, the delivery, or the amount claimed; in an action for money had and received, it must deny the receipt of the money, or the existence of those facts which are alleged to make such receipt by the defendant, a receipt to the use of the plaintiff" (English O. 21, r. 3).

"Deal specifically."—What is meant by dealing specifically with an allegation of fact? It means that the party pleading must make it perfectly clear how much he admits, and how much of it he denies. If he does this the Court will not quarrel with the phrase which he uses. He must not deny en bloc everything alleged against him. A defendant may not now plead "that he denies specifically every allegation contained in the Statement of Claim (or plaint)." Still, in order to deny specifically, it is not necessary to write out every sentence in the Statement of Claim and traverse it in detail. It is sufficient when dealing with matters of inducement or any other allegations which do not go to the gist of the action, to plead that "the defendant denies each of the allegations contained in paragraph 8." This will have the same effect as copying out the whole paragraph and constantly inserting "not." But when the pleader comes to those allegations which are of the gist of the action, he must be more precise. He must plead: "The defendant never agreed as alleged," or "never spoke or published any of the said words," or "never made any such representation as is alleged in paragraph 2 of the Statement of Claim" (3)

Sometimes, in order to obey the rule and to deal specifically with every allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth, it is necessary for the defendant to place on the record two or more distinct traverses to one and the same allegation. Thus, if he pleads, "The defendant never broke or entered the plaintiff's close," he thereby admits that the close in question belongs to the plaintiff. If he intends at the trial to deny that the plaintiff owned or possessed that close, he must say so distinctly and in a separate plea. If he wishes to raise both defences—i.e. to deny the act complained of, and also the plaintiff's title to the land—he must put on the record two separate paragraphs, e.g.: 1. "The defendant never broke or entered the said close." 2. "The said close is not the close of the plaintiff." Merely to deny an allegation in terms will often be ambiguous and therefore evasive. The pleader must always answer "the point of substance" alleged against him, otherwise his pleading will be deemed evasive (r. 19, corresponding with next rule). And, if an allegation be made against him, with details of time and place, etc., he must deny the substance of the allegation and not confine himself to denying it along with those inessential details.(1)

"Each allegation of fact."—Only allegations of fact should be denied; matter of law should not be traversed. And the defendant should never traverse matter not alleged against him: he should be content to answer what is laid against him in the Statement of Claim and not trouble about any other matters which the plaintiff might have, but has not raised.(2) Moreover, it is no part of his duty, when drafting his defence, to anticipate what the plaintiff may hereafter allege in his reply.(3)

"Except damages."—"No denial or defence shall be necessary as to damages claimed, or their amount; but they shall be deemed to be put in issue in all cases, unless expressly admitted" (English O. 21, r. 4). This rule applies to damage of all kinds whether special or general, and whether the alleged damage is part of the cause of action or not.(4)

Evasive denial.

4. Where a defendant denies an allegation of fact in the plaint, he must not do so evasively, but answer the point of substance. Thus, if it is alleged that he received a certain sum of money, it shall not be sufficient to deny that he received that particular amount, but he must deny that he received that sum or any part thereof, or else set out how much he received. And if an allegation is made with divers circumstances, it shall not be sufficient to deny it along with those circumstances.

Evasion.—The pleader must deal specifically with every allegation of fact made by his opponent—that is, he must either admit it frankly or deny it boldly. Any half-admission or half-denial is evasive. Thus a defence in these words, "The terms of the arrangement were never definitely agreed upon as alleged," was held evasive. Jessel, M.R., said: "The defendant is bound to deny that any agreements or any terms of arrangement were ever come to, if that is what he means; if he does not mean that, he should say that there were no terms of arrangement come to except the following terms, and then state what the terms were." (1)

"Point of substance."—Again, a traverse often becomes evasive if it follows too closely the precise language of the allegation traversed. Thus, in Tildesley v. Harper (2) the Statement of Claim alleged that the defendant offered the plaintiff a bribe of £500. The defendant pleaded, following the exact words of the Statement of Claim, that "the defendant had never offered the plaintiff a bribe of £500," which would have been true if he had offered £400 or £499, or any other sum. Fry, J., held that the substance was that a bribe had been offered and that that was not fairly or substantially denied. The defendant should have pleaded that he never offered "a bribe of £500 or any other sum." Leave to amend was eventually given.(3)

"Along with those circumstances."—That is to say, if the plaintiff alleges that he "paid the defendant £500 at 35, Fleet Street, on March 3rd, 1904, in the presence of A.B.," it is an evasive traverse for the defendant to plead: "The plaintiff did not pay the defendant £500 at 35, Fleet Street, on March 3rd, 1904, in the presence of A.B." For he might have paid the defendant £500 on another day or in another place, or when A.B. was not present. And these details are only "circumstances"; they are not of the essence of the allegation. It is sufficient and proper for the defendant to answer the point of substance and to plead: "The plaintiff never paid the defendant £500 or any other sum." (4)

5. Every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the defendant, shall be taken to be admitted except as against a person under disability :

Specific denial.

Provided that the Court may in its discretion require any fact so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission.

Answering opponent's pleading.—The rules of O. VI.-VIII. have defined both the manner in which each party should state his own case, and also prescribe how he should answer his opponent's pleading. The main object of the latter rules (5) is "to secure that each party in turn should fully admit or clearly deny every material allegation made against him so that they may promptly arrive at an issue. With this object three general principles are declared:—

1. It is not sufficient to deny generally the matters alleged by the opposite party, but each party must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth (O. VIII. r. 3).

2. When a party in any pleading denies an allegation of fact in the previous pleading of the opposite party, he must not do so evasively but answer the point of substance (O. VIII. r. 4).

(3) 10 C. D. 393.
(4) Ann. Pr., note to O. 19, r. 19.
(5) Ib., r. 13.

3. Every allegation of fact in any pleading shall be taken to be admitted if it is not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted (O. VIII. r. 5).

This rule is taken from English O. 19, r. 13, but the Legislature has modified the rigour of the rule by providing, in accordance with sect. 58 of the Evidence Act, that the Court may, notwithstanding the absence of any specific denial, require any fact to be proved by the party who relies on it.

Admissions.—A defendant ought not to deny plain and acknowledged facts which it is neither to his interest not in his power to disprove.(1) Where allegations are denied or not admitted, which ought, in the opinion of the Judge, to have been admitted, he may make such order as to any extra costs occasioned thereby as shall be just (English O. 21, r. 9). The discretion under this proviso indicates that the effect of a failure to deny in a written statement an allegation of fact in a plaint does not necessarily amount to a proof in the plaintiff's favour.(2) It is in the discretion of the Court to allow or disallow an application for amendment of a plaint.(3) There is no difference in effect between denying and not admitting an allegation.(4) The distinction usually observed is that a party denies any matter which, if it has occurred, would have been within his own knowledge, while he refuses to admit matters which are alleged to have happened behind his back. But whether he denies or does not admit, he must make it perfectly clear how much he disputes and how much he admits.(5)

Set-off.—This is sect. 111 of the former Code with the amendments noted in italics, and with the omission of the second paragraph of the former section dealing with inquiry. The limitations in jurisdiction which it contained have been transferred to the first clause, and the rest of the paragraph was probably considered unnecessary. The third clause has been added. R. 7 is taken from English O. 20, r. 7. R. 8 is new.

This rule deals with the cross claim known as legal set-off, and which is a claim or demand which the defendant in an action sets off against the claim of the plaintiff, as being his due, whereby he may extinguish the plaintiff's demand, either in whole or in part, according to the amount of the set-off.(1) It is to be distinguished from a plea of payment.(2) The defence of payment does not admit that the demand sued upon is just; it attacks the plaintiff's claim, and urges matter to defeat or at least reduce it on account of some matter connected therewith. But set-off arises out of a transaction extrinsic of the plaintiff's cause of action, being a mutual independent claim. Again, while set-off is the creation of law, payment is an act of the defendant's consent, express or implied.(3)

There is a distinction, also, as regards the mode of pleading. A set-off is a cross debt or claim, on which a separate action may be sustained. Payment can only be the subject of defence to another's action. Set-off may be pleaded or not, at the defendant's pleasure. Failure to do so will not bar a suit by him for the amount of the set-off, as is the case with the defence of payment. Set-off must be specially pleaded, and the facts constituting it proved by the defendant as if he were himself the plaintiff to another action.(4) Recoupment, which is the keeping back of something due because there is an equitable reason to withhold it, is also to be distinguished both from payment and set-off. It can only extinguish the plaintiff's demand in whole or in part, and can never lead to a decree in the defendant's favour.(5)

Common law did not recognize any right of set-off. A defendant who had any cross claim could not raise it in the plaintiff's action. He had to bring a cross action. Legal set-off is the creation of Statute; that is, to be allowed a set-off, it must be shown that there is a statutory right.(6) Successive but limited Statutes were enacted to remove the defect and inconvenience arising from this non-recognition and consequent circuity of action, and the right to plead a set-off was first conferred by 2 Geo. II. c. 22. A set-off was allowed in certain cases.(7) It was a defence proper to the plaintiff's action, defeating or reducing a plaintiff's claim. It was a shield and not a sword.(8) It was allowed only in a limited number of cases, and when established its effect was to show that the plaintiff could not recover at all, or was entitled to recover less than what was claimed, and if the debt due from the plaintiff to the defendant exceeded the amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff, the defendant could not before 1875 recover the difference in the plaintiff's action; he could only set off an amount equal to the plaintiff's claim, and had to bring a cross action for the balance.

Equity, however, allowed a set-off subject to certain restrictions and limitations. Equitable set-off was allowed where the party seeking the benefit of it showed some particular equitable ground for being protected against his adversary's demand. The existence of any particular condition was not considered absolutely necessary for allowing the set-off, though the mere existence of cross demands was not considered sufficient. Some of the grounds most often shown for equitable set-off were the common origin of and connection between the demands; mutual credit; the inability of the defendant otherwise to recover, and in cases of assignments and trusts.(1) Up to the date of the Judicature Act, 1873, there was thus both the statutory or legal set-off and equitable set-off, both of which were subject to certain limitations.

Though the old law as to set-off still remains in force, the Judicature Act created the modern counterclaim. A set-off remains precisely what it was before the Act, and every other kind of cross claim is a counterclaim. The differences between the two are very considerable.

A set-off was allowed only in certain cases. Legal set-off was confined to the cases mentioned by the Statutes. Equitable set-off applied only when the cross claim arose out of the same transaction, no set-off being allowed unless defendant's claim had some relation to the plaintiff's demand; but every cross claim of whatever kind can now in England be pleaded as a counterclaim. The claim and counterclaim may arise out of entirely different transactions, so long as they can conveniently be tried together. Thus a claim founded on tort may be opposed to one founded on contract, and vice versâ. Nextly, a counterclaim is not, like a set-off, a mere defence; it is substantially a cross action. The effect of this is that if the defendant's claim exceeds that of the plaintiff he will be entitled to a decree for it in the plaintiff's action, and need not bring a separate action for the securing of the excess of his claim over the plaintiff's claim.

To sum up: there were thus in English law three varieties of cross claims—(a) set-off, which might be (a) legal where the amount to be set off was a liquidated demand within the Statute, and (b) equitable where, though the amount was unliquidated, the cross claim arose out of the same transaction as that sued upon; and (b) counterclaim, which goes beyond both, and allows all sorts of cross claims, even those arising out of different transactions, subject merely to the convenience of trial.

In this country, however, there is no counterclaim in the sense stated.(2)

(1) See Hukm Chand, C. P. C. 759–767. The subject of set-off and counterclaim will be found fully discussed in this Author's notes to sect. 111 of the last Code.

(2) See Abul Hasan v. Gohra Jan, 5 A. 301 (1883), where Straight, J., pointed out that the Indian Law of Procedure did not sanction a set-off or counterclaim in all the cases contemplated by the English Supreme Court Rules; and Secretary of State v. Madane Lal, 13 A. 296, 299, 300 (1891), per Mahmood, J.; Roulet v. Fetterle, 18 B. 717 (1894) [under the Set-off, however, had long been, prior to the enactment of sect. 121 of the Code of 1859, recognized. A rule of legal set-off in India is contained in this rule which is only an amplified version of sect. 121 of the Code of 1859, as that section was construed by the Indian Courts. It has, however, been held that that section and the section in the last Code corresponding with the present rule only laid down a rule of procedure in regard to cases of set-off, but were not exhaustive of those cases, and that it was not intended to take away any rights of set-off, whether legal or equitable, which parties would have independently of it.(1) And it is well settled that Indian Courts may allow equitable set-off in cases in which Equity Courts in England allow the same, even though such cases do not fall within the language of the present rule.(2) Cross claims are thus in this country limited to cases of set-off (as distinguished from counterclaim), whether such set-off is legal or equitable. It is, however, to be observed that under this rule a set-off is treated as a plaint in a cross action, so that the defendant may get a decree for it, whereas, as already pointed out, set-off, prior to the Judicature Act, could only reduce or extinguish the plaintiff's claim, and a separate action would have had to be brought to recover the amount of any excess beyond the plaintiff's claim.

In pleading a set-off the defendant assumes the position of a plaintiff, and is required to prove the same facts which he would be required to prove if he had brought an original action on his demand. The plaintiff cannot, by taking a dismissal of the suit, avoid an inquiry into the merits of the set-off. Vide post. In a suit for rent due on a mokurari tenure held by the defendant, the defence was that he was entitled to set off against the plaintiff's claim a certain sum due to him on a decree passed by the Privy Council between the same parties. It was held that the set-off could be entertained and inquired into, the decree of the Privy Council not being under execution, and sect. 246 of the last Code being inapplicable to the case.(3)

The present rule does not, of course, affect the special provisions relating to set-off in proceedings in insolvency (4) and in the winding-up Code a cross claim cannot be set up as a defence, except when it arises out of the very transaction sued upon, and is in the nature of a set-off]; Fakir Chandra Dutta v. Gisborne, 8 C. W. N. 174 (1903), where a set-off was disallowed as being based upon a separate transaction. S. 128 (c) allows of rules being made.

Equitable set-off.—It has already been stated (4) that this rule does not take away any rights of equitable set-off (5) which parties would have independent of it. The statutory rule of set-off is absolute in its terms, and where a case is within it a set-off is given as of right; but equitable set-off, from its very nature, depends on the equities of each particular case, and therefore on the discretion of the Court. It cannot be claimed as of right, and will be allowed only where the Court deems it equitable to allow it in any case,(6) though the Court will be guided in the exercise of its discretion by the decisions of the English Equity Courts, which have been recognized in this country.(7) Equitable set-off exists not only in cases of mutual debts and credits, but also where the cross demands arise out of one and the same transaction, or are so connected in their nature and circumstances as to make it inequitable that the plaintiff should recover, and the defendant be driven to a cross suit.(8) Thus unascertained damages for partial breach of a contract may be set-off in answer to a claim for money due on that contract, so far as it was fulfilled, as the cross demands in such a case are connected with the same transaction, and arise out of one and the same contract; (9) and in a suit for arrears of salary there has been allowed to be set off the value of goods and property damaged, lost or not accounted for, by the plaintiff.(10) Where a defendant set up an agreement to the effect that the rents payable on account of lands held by the plaintiff under the defendant were credited to the plaintiff on account of rent due to him from the defendant, it was held that the plea was one of payment and of account and set-off in a general sense, and not one of set-off under sect. 111 of the last Code (now represented by rule 6 of this Order).(1)

"Suit for the recovery of money."—Thus no set-off may be claimed in a suit for property, or for a declaratory decree or injunction; (2) nor is a suit for moveable property one for the recovery of money, even though a money value be assigned in the plaint to the property, and the decree may contain a provision of an alternative character for the payment of the money by the defendant in case of default in the delivery of the property. It has been doubted, but not decided, whether a suit for an account can be held to be for recovery of money within the meaning of this section; (3) but a suit for dissolution of partnership, with a prayer that the balance due should be paid, is within the section.(4) It is to be observed that there is a difference in the wording of the rule as regards the plaintiff's demand and the defendant's set-off. The latter must be of an ascertained sum. The suit, however, need not be for an ascertained sum, the words "recovery of money" including claims for unliquidated damages and mesne profits. See illustration (e) to the rule.(5) Even in the case of a set-off not falling within the provisions of this section, the claims must both be for money, as is indicated by the terms, O. XX. r. 19, post.

"Claims to set-off."—A defendant cannot be permitted to carry on two suits for the same demand at the same time, and using a demand in set-off is a bar to a subsequent suit for that demand. A defendant may, however, it has been submitted, claim a set-off of a demand during the pendency of a suit for the same demand.(6)

"Ascertained sum."—The word "debt" was used in the Code of 1859. It was held restricted to an ascertained sum, and to exclude unliquidated damages and mesne profits as being damages.(7) Under the last and present Code the matter is clear, both from the use of the word "ascertained" and the addition of illustration (c) to the section. The sum sought to be set off under this rule must be a sum ascertained; that is, liquidated, and not damages undetermined,(1) such as a liquidated amount due under a bond,(2) or a debt payable according to an award.(3) The sum to be set off must be ascertained before the set-off is claimed, and it is not sufficient that it may be ascertained on inquiry.(4) The claim is sufficiently certain if it is capable of being reduced to a certainty by simple calculation.(5) A sum decreed is ascertained and may be set off.(6) No decree by way of set-off can be awarded to a defendant for a sum to be ascertained on a settlement of accounts, even though the result of the suit shows that nothing is due to the plaintiff.(7) There is nothing in this rule to restrict the set-off to claims in respect of the same matter which forms the subject of the plaintiff's suit. The rule allows a set-off of every ascertained sum of money, and no restriction should be placed on that right which is not to be found in the section itself. Though the restrictions on equitable set-off of unascertained sums are proper, there is no reason, as there is no authority, for grafting them on to the law in regard to ascertained sums.(8) While it is a general principle of set-off at law that the amount claimed should be certain and ascertained, and that an unliquidated demand may not be set off even if it should arise on the same contract on which the plaintiff's demand is based, this is not so in the case of equitable set-off. This may be allowed in the case of unliquidated damages, that is, an amount which can only be ascertained by the decision of the Court (9) where the respective claims of the parties arise out of one and the same transaction.(10)

No. 25, mainly on the ground that the amount spent in repairs, though not ascertained at the beginning of the inquiry, would be so at the time the inquiry contemplated by the section was finished, and the Court would have to make a decree, the amount being a debt if the tenant could show that he had not spent more than the landlord was bound to spend. However, if this argument were correct, then it has been pointed out (Hukm Chand, 789) every claim for unliquidated damages might be set off, as after inquiry the amount of such damages would also be an ascertained amount.

"Legally recoverable."—Set-off is allowed to prevent cross actions. It was not intended to give new rights, except to the extent of giving facilities for the enforcing of rights which are already enforceable in an action; and it has always been accordingly held that a set-off can only be successfully pleaded when an action could have been maintained for the same debt.(1) As the sum must be legally recoverable, a demand arising out of a transaction which is legally invalid cannot be the subject of a set-off. A defendant therefore cannot recover in respect of a claim without cause of action,(2) or barred under sect. 11, ante (3), or O. II. r. 2, or by the Limitation Act,(4) or based on a decree incapable of being enforced,(5) or in respect of an infant's debt.(6) In a suit for arrears of rent the amount of a new road cess paid by the defendant was held not to have been payable by the plaintiff under the terms of the lease, as a prior income tax was, and therefore not recoverable by the defendant from the plaintiff, and thus not liable to be set off.(7) In short, the claim sought to be set off must be one upon which a separate action could have been maintained. The money set-off must be of course recoverable from the plaintiff, not from any one else, and it must be due to the defendant, who cannot set up a right subsisting in a third party. The defendant's right of set-off of a demand against a person is not affected by the circumstance that the suit is brought not by that person but by an assignee of his. This is so, even where the assignment is by a sale in execution of a decree against him.(8) A cannot set off against a claim made by B, in respect of separate dealings between him and A, a debt due from a firm consisting of a father and two sons, one of whom is B.(9) Neither can a defendant set off against a claim of money any portion of an amount in respect of which the defendant, jointly with another, not a party to the suit, can claim contribution from the plaintiff.(10) Where in a suit by a company in liquidation it was argued that the defendant's claim was not legally recoverable as his remedy was only proof in liquidation, where probably he would recover not the whole of the ascertained sum but only a dividend, it was held that the words "legally recoverable" had no reference to the ability of the debtor to pay the demand in full, and that a sum was legally recoverable, though in the result the creditor must be satisfied with a dividend.(11)

regards the identity of the parties, but also as regards the quality of their rights. The debts should not only be due to and from the same person, but in the same capacity. A party may act in different characters, and his private will be held different from his official character. So in a suit by a public officer in his official character, the defendant cannot set off a claim against him personally, and vice versâ. Similarly, a claim which the defendant has against the plaintiff individually cannot be set off against a claim due to plaintiff as trustee, though on account of the special nature of a trust he may set off a claim due to him individually against a claim due by him as trustee.(1) An account due as manager cannot be set off against a personal liability.(2) A legal representative of a deceased does not fill the same character as regards his own debts and the debts of the deceased. See illustrations (a) and (b) to rule. An executor or administrator, however, fills the same character as regards debts due to and from the deceased, and so in an action against the representative as such the latter may set off all claims against the plaintiff which his testator or intestate may have set off against him, and which, therefore, must have been due to the testator or intestate.(3) Where in the case of a company in liquidation each liability arose prior to the liquidation, though the amounts were ascertained after it, both parties were held to fill the same character.(4) A set-off was disallowed where the decree which was sought to be set off was a decree not against the plaintiffs but against third parties benamidars of the plaintiffs.(5)

Written statement.—The rule is that a set-off, if claimed, must be specially pleaded. If, however, the particulars are sufficiently set out, it is not necessary that it should be specifically stated that they are alleged by way of set-off. The written statement contemplated by this section is deemed a plaint for the sum sought to be set off, and must be stamped accordingly.(6) But these cases have been dissented from by Banerjee, J.(7) Where the defendant did not raise an issue as to set-off in the first Court, the Privy Council declined to entertain it.(8)

Jurisdiction in cases of set-off.—The amount claimed to be set off must not exceed the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction.(9) This proviso was in the last Code contained in the second paragraph, which is now omitted. It has been transferred to the first clause. The entire amount claimed to be set off must not exceed the limits of jurisdiction; the excess of such amount over the plaintiff's claim, for which the defendant may ask a decree in his favour, not being material in the question of jurisdiction.(1) And where a Court has two different pecuniary jurisdictions, the jurisdiction referred to in this rule will be that in which the suit is being taken cognizance of. Thus, where a Subordinate Judge, with unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction, was invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction, and in the exercise of that jurisdiction took cognizance of a suit, it was held that the claim for set-off in it, of an amount exceeding the pecuniary limit of the Small Cause Court jurisdiction, could not be inquired into by him.(2) A question might arise whether a Court could entertain a set-off, a claim for which, though within its pecuniary jurisdiction, was otherwise not within it. It has been held that the rule does not refer to material jurisdiction in any way, or contemplate a case in which a suit for the amount claimed to be set-off is beyond the jurisdiction on account of its nature, as may be the case in some Provinces as regards claims for amounts for rent of agricultural lands.(3) It has, however, been also held generally that no Court can entertain a set-off if it would not have had jurisdiction to entertain a suit, if one had been brought to recover the money sought to be set off.(4) And see last paragraph.

Effect of set-off.—The set-off is to have the effect of a plaint (5) in a cross suit, and being treated as a cross action it is not affected by anything which relates solely to the plaintiff's claim. It is not necessary that the plaintiff's demand should actually exist. Thus the defendant may deny the plaintiff's claim, and also plead a set-off, and may obtain a decree for it, although no sum may be found due to the plaintiff.(6) And if a certain amount is found due to the plaintiff, but a greater sum is found due to the defendant, a decree will be made in favour of the defendant for the recovery of the balance.(7) And it has been held that the same rule applies in the case of a set-off which is not within the purview of this rule.(8)

An appeal will lie to the same Court as if the sum had been demanded in a separate suit.(9) So long as set-off was deemed a mere defence the plaintiff could at any stage of the suit put an end to it by putting an end to the suit itself. It fell with the action to which it was an adjunct. However, as affirmative relief can now be given on a claim for set-off, the plaintiff cannot, by refusing to proceed with the case, defeat the defendant's right to recover under his set-off.(1) As to lien,(2) the rule seems to assume that it is usual for a decree to make costs payable to the pleader instead of to the party.(3)

Rules relating to written statements.—This clause is new; see notes to other rules of same order. Court fees must be paid on set-off claimed in written statement.(4) Where the case was not strictly one of set-off under the former section, so as to make applicable to it the provisions of the third paragraph of that section (corresponding with the second clause of this rule), it was held that the written statement need not be stamped as a plaint.(5)

Subsequent pleadings

9. No pleading subsequent to the written statement of a defendant other than by way of defence to a set-off shall be presented except by the leave of the Court and upon such terms as the Court thinks fit, but the Court may at any time require a written statement or additional written statement from any of the parties and fix a time for presenting the same. [s. 112.]

"No pleading," etc.—And to sect. 112 of the last Code shortened and remodelled. This rule corresponds to sect. 122 of the Code of 1859. By r. 1, ante, written statements must be filed before or at the first hearing, by which is meant that they must be filed before the parties have entered upon their case.(6) This is subject to r. 6. Accordingly an application to file a supplemental written statement after the case had begun was refused.(7) Where a written statement was improperly admitted, but without prejudice to the opposite party, the Court refused to interfere in appeal.(8)

"Court may at any time require."—This may be done at any time. In the Code of 1859 occurred the words "before final judgment," and it was accordingly held to mean that written statements could be called for only by the first Court and before judgment.(9) The written statement may be called for from either plaintiff or defendant. The Court was held justified in calling for a written statement which did not add to or vary the plaintiff's claim, but simply supplied omissions in the plaint.(1) In the High Court an order directing the filing of a written statement is generally asked for and granted on the presentation of the plaint, and it was held that this was not such an order of Court as to subject the party to the penalty of contempt for non-compliance.(2) It was in an early case held that if a party neglects to file a written statement when ordered to do so the Court would examine him as to his grounds of defence, and confine him to such statements or adjourn the case at his expense.(3) But in other cases the Court refused to hear a party who having been ordered to file a written statement omitted to do so.(4)

Procedure when party fails to present written statement called for by Court.

10. Where any party from whom a written statement is so required fails to present the same within the time fixed by the Court, the Court may pronounce judgment against him, or make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit.

Default to present written statement.—The Court may either pass a decree against the defaulting party or make such other order as it thinks proper. Where, in a case before Peterson, J., the defendants, after ample opportunity, neglected to put in a written statement, that learned Judge stated that in future he should put the defendant into the box and examine him as to the grounds of his defence; and if on examination it should appear that a written statement was desirable, the case would be adjourned for that purpose at the expense of the defaulting party.(5) Defendant remained in Calcutta one month after it was ordered that he should put in a written statement, and then went on a pilgrimage. His son applied for leave to file a written statement, and his application was refused, as no cause was shown why his father had not filed it before he left Calcutta.(6) This rule corresponds with sect. 106, Act VIII. of 1859. It has been held that in Rules 105 and 106 of the Bombay High Court Rules (Original Side) there is nothing to prevent a defendant who has not filed his written statement from defending the suit at the hearing.(7)

ORDER IX.

Appearance of Parties and Consequence of Non-appearance.

1. On the day fixed in the summons for the defendant to appear and answer, the parties shall be in attendance at the Court-house in person or by their respective pleaders, and the suit shall then be heard unless the hearing is adjourned to a future day fixed by the Court. [s. 96.]

Parties to appear on day fixed in summons for defendant to appear and answer.

"Day fixed."—This refers to the day fixed for the first hearing of the suit.(1) An appearance under the Code is not the same thing as appearance as it used to be in the Supreme Court, and is now in the High Court where the English mode of entering appearance by attorney is recognized, and according to the practice of the High Court there is power to order a case to be set down at once in the general cause list if the defendant enters appearance by his attorney before the time for appearance fixed in the summons has expired. In any case a Court could by consent, and on the application of the defendant, issue a new summons altering the day for appearance.(2) When, however, dealing with the question of appearance, as that term is used in the Code for the purpose of determining whether the provisions in this Order apply, an objection by the defendant before the day fixed for hearing to the plaintiff's application for attachment before judgment is not an appearance on that date.(3)

Application of these provisions.—These provisions are, from their very nature and language, applicable to suits in their initial stage and not to proceedings taken in execution of decrees made in those suits. It was, however, at one time erroneously considered that sect. 647 of the Code (now 141) applied to execution proceedings as being proceedings of a miscellaneous character, and by virtue of that section these provisions were, so far as was practicable, made applicable to such proceedings. In order to overrule such decisions, sect. 647 was amended by Act VI. of 1892, by the addition of an Explanation declaring that that section did not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits. The application of sect. 647 having thus been prohibited to applications for execution, it was held that there was nothing in the Code as so amended which authorized a Court to apply at the stage of execution any of the procedure enacted in the corresponding Chapter of the last Code.(1) But that though this was so the Court might, where necessary, act under the inherent powers it possesses to make such just orders as are necessary for the proper disposal of the work given to it.(2)

Appearance.—The word "appear" must be interpreted in the same sense in all the following rules as in other parts of this Code in which it occurs, such as O. XVII. r. 2, post,(3) and whether the plaintiff or defendant is spoken of.(4) What then is appearance? If there is none, the judgment is ex parte. It has been said that in most cases the question whether a decree is ex parte or not is a question of fact.(5) It is necessary, however, to ascertain the law governing those facts. O. IX. r. 1 indicates what is meant by appearance, namely, the actual attendance in the Court-house of the party in person or by pleader or recognized agent, who, under O. III. r. 1, must be duly appointed to act on his behalf, or by a co-party under O. 1. r. 12. Under the terms of O. III. r. 1, an appearance by a recognized agent is equivalent to an appearance in person, unless the Court directs personal appearance. Plaintiffs must all be represented by the same pleader, or set of pleaders, and cannot be severally represented by different pleaders.(6) Defendants can, of course, be severally represented, though where such several representation is unnecessary, as where the interests are not in conflict, the Court will not allow more than one set of costs. Sect. 64 of the last Code, read with Form No. 117 of the Fourth Schedule of that Code, explained, it was held, the nature of the defendant's appearance in obedience to the summons to appear and answer. He was to appear in person or by a duly authorized pleader, duly instructed and able to answer all material questions, or who shall be accompanied by some other person (which includes a recognized agent) able to answer all such questions. He was further given notice that in default of his appearance—that is, appearance in either of the ways specified—the suit would be determined in his absence; that is, under this Chapter of the last Code. Thus, the appearance mentioned in that Chapter meant attendance in person or by an authorized co-party or by a pleader "duly instructed," etc., or by a recognized agent who intended to appear and did in fact appear for the party, whether he was able or not to answer all material questions.(7) The test of whether a defendant has or has not "appeared" is whether such of the requirements of the summons as relate to appearance have or have not been complied with.(8) On this principle it is held that when a pleader attends who is not duly instructed in the suit he does not represent the defendant who in such case does not appear.(1) Inasmuch as appearance is attendance in the Court-house on the day fixed for hearing, it is clear that what is done before the day fixed in the summons and that the mere filing of a vakalutnamah is not appearing in person or by pleader; (2) nor is an "appearance," in the technical sense as used on the original side of the Court, by the entry of the name of the attorney on the record; nor was there appearance where the defendant had filed a vakalutnama and objected to attachment issuing before judgment, but did not appear as directed by the summons, nor on a further date when the case was decided.(3) Nor is merely putting in a written statement, but when the case comes on not attending in person or by pleader, an appearance.(4)

Nextly, the personal attendance at the day of hearing must be in accordance with law. If a person is ordered to attend in person, appearance can only be effected in this way, and if he does not, but sends a pleader, he will be considered absent, and there is no appearance. See O. IX. r. 12, post.(5) If there be no such directions he may appear either in person or by a co-plaintiff or co-defendant under O. 1. r. 12, or by a pleader or recognized agent under O. III. r. 1. They must, however, represent him, and therefore the appearance of an unauthorized pleader is not an appearance by the party.(6) There is, of course, no difficulty when there is no actual attendance by any of these persons; nor, indeed, where there is attendance, except in the cases to which reference will be made. If a party attends in person or by pleader there is appearance, though he may neither have filed a written statement (7) nor made a verbal one.(8) If the Court has refused to receive a written statement, but the pleader attends when issues are settled and cross-examines witnesses, there is an appearance.(9) It has even been held that where a decree is passed on a solehnamah and the defendant alleges that it is a forgery and that she had no notice of the suit, it is not ex parte.(10) But this has been dissented from, it being held that the defendant is entitled to go behind the decree and to show that it is in fact ex parte, and that the fact that the decree appears to be based on a compromise impugned as a forgery does not make sect. 108 (now O. IX. r. 13), post, inapplicable.(11) The appearance, moreover, is to answer, and if an application by a party who attends for leave to be heard is rejected and the defendant is not heard, then the judgment is ex parte.(12) Where both parties appeared and the case was gone through in their presence and nothing remained to be done except to hear arguments, the case was held not to be one which could be dealt with as for default of appearance.(1)

Contest has mainly arisen where either the party or his pleader or recognized agent does actually attend in court, but applies for an adjournment, and, when the adjournment is refused, withdraws from court. So far as these provisions are concerned, the only question is appearance or non-appearance. If the party has appeared in either of the ways specified, viz. in person or by authorized co-party, or by authorized pleader "duly instructed and able to answer," etc., or by a recognized agent who intends to appear and does in fact appear for the party, then he has appeared, and it is immaterial for what purpose he has appeared or what action he has taken on such appearance. If, therefore, a party is present in person and personally applies for an adjournment, he has appeared; the purpose for which he appeared, or the action which he took on appearance, is immaterial.(2) Appearance, however, by a pleader does not, as in the case of a party, mean mere presence. He must also be duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit. Where, therefore, the party is absent, and an application for adjournment is made on his behalf by a pleader, who has no other instructions, and whose functions are at an end when the adjournment is refused, in that case the party has not appeared. If, therefore, the pleader in such case retires after an unsuccessful application for adjournment, the decree passed is ex parte.(3) In a recent case, after the plaintiff's case had been closed and the defendant's case part-heard, counsel for the defendant applied for an adjournment, mainly on the ground that two of his witnesses had not arrived, and this was granted, but he was warned that if they did not appear on the following day any application for a further adjournment must be supported by proper materials. He was present on the following day, but without the two witnesses, and his application for a further adjournment was refused on the ground that no proper reasons for it had been made out. On this he withdrew; and the case was then decided on its merits. When he afterwards applied to have the decree set aside as ex parte, it was submitted that at the adjourned hearing he had not appeared, but had only applied for a further adjournment,(1) and that therefore sect. 157 of the last Code (now represented by O. XVII. r. 2) became applicable.(2) It was held that the Court had no power to make an order under sect. 108 of the last Code (now represented by O. IX. r. 13) combined with sect. 157 of the last Code, and that his remedy was an appeal against the refusal of his application for further adjournment.(3)

As was pointed out in Soonderlal v. Goorprasad, 23 B. at p. 417, the headnote in Rampertab Mull v. Jakeeram Agurwallah, 23 C. 991 (1896), is quite misleading. The Court did not, however, actually decide the question whether or not the case fell within s. 102 of the last Code, but dismissed the application on the merits. Where, however, a pleader has instructions, but says the brief came to him too late to prepare himself, this may be a good reason for adjournment, but is not, it has been said, a default of appearance: Chiranji Lal v. Kundan Lal, 20 A 294 (1898); foll. Ramchandra v. Madhav, 16 B. 23 (1891), and diss. from Shibendra v. Kinoo, 12 C. 605 (1886). The judgment refers to a case at p. 603, but this appears to be a mistake, and the case at p. 605 is meant.

Lastly, there is the case in which the party being absent, the recognized agent is present. If the latter accompanies a pleader, who applies for an adjournment but who is otherwise uninstructed, then it is a question of fact whether the agent is able to answer all material questions, in which case the party must be deemed to appear by the pleader. In such a case, the requirements of the summons as to appearance are as fully satisfied as if the party had appeared in person and applied for an adjournment; and equally, in such a case, the purpose of the appearance or the action taken on appearance is immaterial. If, however, the party being absent, neither the pleader applying for adjournment nor any person accompanying him, whether a recognized agent or not, is able to answer, then, apart from O. III. r. 1, there is no appearance within this rule, and the only remaining question is whether the party appears by his recognized agent under the former rule. That is a question of fact. The mere presence of the agent is not necessarily an appearance of the party. It must be determined whether he intended to appear, and did in fact appear, for the party, in the exercise of his power under O. III. r. 1, ante.(4) Where a defendant did not appear, and it was alleged that he was insane, and the Judge struck off the case, it was held that he should not have done so, but ought to have made the inquiry contemplated in Act XXXV. of 1858.(5)

Dismissal of suit where summons not served in consequence of plaintiff's failure to pay costs.

2. Where on the day so fixed it is found that the summons has not been served upon the defendant in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the court-fee or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed: [s. 97.]

summons has not been served upon the defendant, if on the day fixed for him to appear and answer he attends in person or by agent when he is allowed to appear by agent.

"May make an order that the suit be dismissed."—If the plaintiff has omitted to pay the court-fee by accident or the like, the Court may, on his application, direct the issue of a fresh summons. If it does not, there is no other course open but to dismiss the suit; or the Court may dismiss the suit at once, leaving the plaintiff to apply under r. 4, post. The rule applies not merely where there is a single defendant, but also where one of several defendants has not been served, for the suit is incomplete, and cannot be heard without notice to all the defendants. Where, however, in the latter case no objection was previously taken, the Court declined to entertain it on special appeal.(1) The suit may be dismissed whether the summons was that originally issued, or that re-issued, on account of non-service of the original one.(2) But in no case should the case be disposed of before the day fixed for hearing.(3) In the under-mentioned case the Court was disposed to think, though the case was dealt with on the merits, that an order under the corresponding former section was not appealable.(4) If the court-fee for serving the summons on a defendant newly added by the Court is not paid, the suit, according to the Bombay High Court, should be dismissed altogether, even as against the original defendant; but if it is proceeded with and decreed against him, and he does not take that objection on appeal, he cannot raise it for the first time on special appeal.(5) The Allahabad High Court appears to have taken a different view,(6) holding that in such a case the suit should be dismissed against those defendants only on whom the summons could not be served, but that if the suit is by mistake dismissed as against the original defendants also, to avoid injustice the dismissal against them should be held to have been ordered under this rule.

Proviso.—The rule contemplates a defendant appearing before service of the summons. In the under-mentioned case (7) the Court stated that it was not necessary to decide whether, if a plaintiff were merely to lodge a plaint and take no proceedings upon it against a defendant, the latter in such a case would have a right to appear; but that where, as in that case, a plaintiff, by legal process of arrest, brought the defendant before the Court, then he had a right to appear at the hearing of the case, although no summons had been served upon him.

"Called on for hearing."—The parties are bound to attend from the time the Court opens, and must be in attendance when the case is called on for hearing, and, if absent at that time, they will be treated as not appearing.(1) The Court is not bound to wait for any party until it is about to close for the day, or even till the pleader for the party can find it convenient to attend on account of his engagement in another Court; as, if this were done, Courts would find it difficult to get through their work.(2) The subsequent day referred to in sect. 98 of the last Code was that to which the first hearing is adjourned; (3) but the day fixed for hearing after a remand on appeal was held to be within the meaning of those words.(4) The reference to adjournment has now been omitted because this matter is sufficiently covered by the terms of O. XVII. r. 2.

"Neither party appears."—It does not apply when a party is present, but has omitted to serve notice. Failure to take measures to serve a person with a notice as ordered by the Court is not a non-appearance.(5)

Shall be dismissed.—In cases where the Court does not otherwise direct, dismissal is the only consequence, and the proviso relates to the postponing of the case, and not to the making of any final order in it.(6) Where neither party appears on the day fixed for the hearing of a suit, an order striking the case off the file is illegal; the only order that can be passed in the circumstances being that of dismissal.(7) The rejection of an application of the respondent, asking that security for costs may be taken from the appellant on the non-appearance of both the parties, has been considered, by virtue of the provisions of sect. 647 (now 141), a dismissal under the section which this rule replaces.(8)

Plaintiff may bring fresh suit or Court may restore suit to file.

4. Where a suit is dismissed under rule 2 or rule 3, the plaintiff may (subject to the law of limitation) bring a fresh suit, or he may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his not paying the court-fee and postal charges (if any) required within the time fixed before the issue of the summons, or for his non-appearance, as the case may be, the Court shall make an order setting aside the dismissal and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit. "Fresh suit."—Applying the principle embodied in this rule, if a suit is dismissed by an order purporting to be made under this section before the day fixed for hearing on failure to deposit talabana, this irregularity on the part of the Court does not deprive the plaintiff of his right to bring a new suit under this section.(2)

"Satisfies the Court."—Each question of this kind must be dealt with, not according to any hard-and-fast general rule, but according to its own particular circumstances.(3)

"Set aside dismissal."—When a suit has been dismissed for default, and the plaintiff has neglected to make an application within thirty days, there can be no review of judgment under sect. 114, post.(4) A Judge, when restoring a suit, has no jurisdiction to pass at that time any order as to the general costs of the suit.(5) There is no appeal from an order setting aside the dismissal and appointing a day for proceeding with the suit.(6) But where such an order has been set aside on appeal, and the last order has been reversed by the High Court, the proceedings of the first Court and the decree passed by it are not invalidated on the ground that as an effect of the reversal of the order restoring the suit, there were no proceedings in Court at the time of the passing of the decree in which such decree could be passed.(7)

Dismissal of suit where plaintiff, after summons returned unserved, fails for a year to apply for fresh summons.

5. (1) Where, after a summons has been issued to the defendant, or to one of several defendants, and returned unserved, the plaintiff fails for a period of one year from the date of the return made to the Court by the officer ordinarily certifying to the Court returns made by the serving officers, to apply for the issue of a fresh summons and to satisfy the Court that he has used his best endeavours to discover the residence of the defendant who has not been served, or that such defendant is avoiding service of process, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed as against such defendant.

(2) In such case the plaintiff may (subject to the law of limitation) bring a fresh suit.

Object and effect of rule.—This rule recognizes the practice of issuing fresh summons on the return of the original unserved, but was enacted to put an end to the reprehensible practice of instituting a suit, and then holding proceedings in terrorem over the defendant for a long period without taking any steps to bring it to a hearing.(1) Time runs from the date of the return by the Nazir.(2) An addition has, therefore, been made interpreting "return" as that not of the Bailiff but of the Nazir. A plaintiff cannot, however, by merely applying to the Court within a year of the return, for a fresh summons, avoid dismissal of the suit. He must also satisfy the Court that he used diligence in the meanwhile. If he fails to establish either of the two points, his suit must be dismissed.(3) It is to be observed that the exercise of the power conferred is discretional only. The refusal to take a fresh summons on a defendant, though sufficient to justify the dismissal of the suit against him, does not operate to release him from liability.(4) As regards the right to bring a fresh suit,(5) see the case cited, in which the section was recently applied.

summons was not duly served or was not served in sufficient time, the Court shall order the plaintiff to pay the costs occasioned by the postponement.

"Appears."—See notes to r. 1, ante. This rule is not limited in its application to defendants residing within British India.(1) By sect. 74 of the Dekkhan Ryots Act, the Code is only to be applied so far as it is consistent with the Act.(2)

"When the suit is called on."—These words appear to have been inserted so as to limit the rule to the first day of hearing and mark the distinction between these provisions and those of O. XVII. r. 2.

Clause (a).—No legal decree can be passed ex parte without there being proof of the due service of the summons.(3) Where the summons has been served through another Court, see sect. 28, ante. To justify an ex-parte decree against all defendants, all must have been served, and if the defendant's liability is joint, and if a decree can only go against all, it has been held that without notice to all the defendants no judgment could be passed.(4) It was held with reference to sect. 56 of the Code of 1859, that "duly served" refers to the mode of service and not to the agency by which it is effected.(5) Where a summons is sent by post to a defendant residing out of British India, it is not, in the absence of evidence that the person to be served was at the time residing at the place to which the summons was sent, sufficient proof of service to show that the summons was posted, but there must be some evidence of its having been received by the defendant.(6) The Court may proceed, ex parte, whether the defendant has been summoned only to appear and answer the claim, or, in addition, to attend and give evidence. In the latter case, it is not necessary, before proceeding ex parte, that all the processes prescribed by law for compelling the attendance of the defendant as a witness should be exhausted, it being sufficient that the service of the summons for his attendance has been effected.(7) When a defendant appears, the failure to put in a defence in writing or verbally does not authorize the trial of the suit or make the decree passed in it ex parte,(8) not even if the defendant should have been ordered to file a written statement.(9) And if the defendant appears at the first hearing and files a written statement, the fact of his non-appearance at the final hearing does not operate to make the decision passed in the case ex parte.(10) In England a plaintiff is by Statute allowed in certain cases to sign judgment for default;

but in this country it has been held that, in all cases where the Court proceeds ex parte, the plaintiff must produce primâ facie proof of his case,(1) and must prove the claim to the satisfaction of the Court, before he can obtain a decree, except in the case of summary proceedings on negotiable instruments. It is, however, to be noted now that under O. VIII. r. 5 every fact not denied is taken to be admitted; though under that rule such admission is not necessarily equivalent to a proof.(2)

The remedies open to a defendant against whom an ex-parte decree has been passed, and who contends that the Court should not have so proceeded, are either to apply under O. IX. r. 13 (formerly sect. 108), post, or, to appeal from the ex parte decree, under sect. 96. Under O. IX. r. 13, by which a summary remedy is given, the complainant must satisfy the Court not merely that the proof required by this rule was not given, but that in fact the summons was not duly served, or that the defendant was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing. Where a defendant appeals from an ex parte decree, it is sufficient, in the first instance, to establish that in the Court which passed that decree the necessary proof of service of summons was not given. It is not incumbent on the appellant to show that the summons was in fact not duly served.(3)

Clause (b).—In the under-mentioned case it was held that the Court is bound in every case to issue a fresh summons, though it may order the plaintiff to pay the costs of the postponement, and cannot dismiss the suit or reject an application governed by this rule.(4)

Clause (c).—Where, if the defendant had not appeared, the Court would have been bound to postpone the hearing on the ground that sufficient time had not been given to him to appear and answer to the suit, his appearing ought not to put him in a worse position, and an adjournment should be granted.(5)

Procedure where defendant appears on day of adjourned hearing and assigns good cause for previous non-appearance.

7. Where the Court has adjourned the hearing of the suit ex parte, and the defendant, at or before such hearing, appears and assigns good cause for his previous non-appearance, he may, upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise, be heard in answer to the suit as if he had appeared on the day fixed for his appearance. [s. 101.]

Appearance at adjourned hearing only.—Sect. 111, Act VIII. of 1859. What the Legislature intended was that the defendant might be admitted to defend the suit merely upon a petition and without any evidence being gone into to prove the truth of the fact stated in that petition. In fact, the section contains no provision for and does not appear to contemplate taking such evidence.(1) If the Court admits the defendant to defend, the suit will proceed in the ordinary course as a defended suit. If the Court refuses this, then no appeal lies from the order of refusal; (2) the suit proceeds as an ex parte suit, and the defendant may then apply to set aside the decree under O. IX. r. 13, post,(3) and if that application be refused he may then appeal under O. XLIII. r. 1 (c); or he may appeal against the ex parte decree without resorting to the procedure laid down in O. IX. r. 13, post.(4) But where though the Court refuses to receive a written statement, it frames issues in the presence of the defendant's pleader, who is permitted to cross-examine, the decree is not an ex parte one.(5)

Procedure where defendant only appears.

8. Where the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed, unless the defendant admits the claim, or part thereof, in which case the Court shall pass a decree against the defendant upon such admission, and, where part only of the claim has been admitted, shall dismiss the suit so far as it relates to the remainder.

Application of rule.—This rule corresponds with sect. 114 of the Code of 1859. In construing an order alleged by one side and denied by the other to be an order under this rule, the order will be considered as one under it if, apart from the mere description which the Court gives of its action, and apart from the actual fact of the plaintiff's appearance or non-appearance, the real meaning and substance of the Court's action is, that it dismisses the suit on the view, whether right or wrong, that the plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear.(6) It was formerly considered (7) that the Chapter in which the section corresponding to the rule appeared, applied to execution proceedings, but this was subsequently held not to be so, having regard to the change made in 1892 in sect. 647, corresponding with sect. 141, post.(8) The rule is applicable to adjourned hearings of cases; (9) and to proceedings before the Court to which a reference is made under the Land Acquisition Act.(1) It has been recently held by the Privy Council that this rule does not apply where the main issue of the case has been decided on its merits and there is a subsequent default in appearance.(2) In this case the plaintiff had sued to recover the sum paid by him to release property from a wrongful attachment, and also for damages for it, the District Court had dismissed the first claim on its merits, the plaintiff had then abandoned the second claim and had failed to appear in subsequent proceedings, and the District Judge had thereupon dismissed the whole suit under sect. 102 of the last Code, now represented by this rule.

Non-appearance.—An order can only be made for non-appearance (3) of the plaintiff. A plaintiff fails to appear within the meaning of this rule when his pleader declines to proceed with the suit, and it makes no difference that the party himself was present in Court.(4) It was held under the Code of 1859 that where a commission has issued for local inquiry and the Commissioner requires the attendance of the parties, should the defendant appear and the plaintiff make default in appearing on the day appointed, the proper course is for the Commissioner to dismiss the suit under this rule.(5) A suit can only be dismissed under this rule for default of a nature therein described, and therefore not for non-attendance of witnesses.(6) The Court should neither receive evidence on behalf of a defendant nor examine the merits of the case.(7) If a suit is dismissed for want of evidence, the decision is one on the merits and not under this rule.(8) Non-appearance caused by the death of the plaintiff should not be confounded with default.(9)

Judgment.—The suit should either be dismissed or decreed. "Struck off" is not a proper mode of disposing of the case;(10) though in a case in which such an order was passed, it was held that though the correct expression had not been used, practically the case had to be regarded as having been decided ex parte.(11)

Plaintiff's remedy upon dismissal.—Where the suit is dismissed the plaintiff may apply for a review without any previous application under the next rule; (1) or he may apply under that rule. It is not necessary to draw up a formal decree; and the fact that such a decree has been drawn up cannot alter the nature of an order of dismissal under this rule, which is not a decree within the meaning of sect. 2, and is not liable to be challenged by way of appeal. The present Code has in this respect altered the pre-existing law.(2) An order dismissing a suit at an adjourned hearing for non-appearance of the plaintiff and his pleader was held to be an order under sect. 157 (now O. XVII. r. 2), and its consequential section (the present rule), and not sect. 158 (now O. XVII. r. 3).(3)

Decree against plaintiff by default bars fresh suit.

9. (1) Where a suit is wholly or partly dismissed under rule 8, the plaintiff shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. But he may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit.

(2) No order shall be made under this rule unless notice of the application has been served on the opposite party.

Application of rule.—This rule corresponds with sect. 119 of Act VIII. of 1859. The rule applies to original cases and not to cases in appeal,(4) a special procedure in hearing appeals being provided; nor does it apply to execution proceedings.(5) It bars a subsequent suit only when the plaintiff in the latter had been either the plaintiff in the former suit or represented by him.(6) It does not bar a suit the plaintiff in which had been a contesting defendant in a former suit.(7) When an executor presents an application for probate he cannot be regarded as a plaintiff suing in respect of some cause of action, and therefore this rule will not apply.(8) It makes it compulsory on a Court to set aside a dismissal order under r. 8 of this Order where the plaintiff satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance; but it does not take away the Court's power to restore the case for any other valid reason.(1) It was held to apply to rent cases under Act VIII. of 1869, B. C.,(2) and to proceedings under sect. 9 of the Specific Relief Act.(3) As to default of appearance before Commissioner, see notes to r. 8, ante. By O. XVII. r. 2, post, the present procedure applies to any day to which the hearing of the trial may be adjourned, but not to the case of a person obtaining time to do some act and making default. That falls under r. 3 of the latter Order.(4) This rule does not apply to suits dismissed for any other reason than non-appearance, and includes suits dealt with under O. XVII. r. 2, post, but not those disposed of under r. 3 of that Order.(5) Where a suit was dismissed "in default of prosecution" on the ground that the plaintiff failed to deposit talabana, the order was held not to be one under the section corresponding with this rule,(6) as was also the case where a suit was dismissed because neither plaintiff nor his pleader appeared on the day fixed for hearing the argument.(7) At an adjourned hearing of a suit, witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff not being in attendance, the plaintiff applied for issue of a warrant against one of them. The Court refused the application, and the pleader for the plaintiff thereupon intimated that he had no further instructions to appear; and the suit was dismissed. Subsequently an application was made under sect. 103 (this rule) to set aside the order of dismissal. On objection by the defendant that inasmuch as the dismissal was under sect. 158 (O. XVII. r. 3) the remedy of the plaintiff was by way of an application for review,—Held, that the suit was dismissed under sect. 102 (last rule) read with sect. 157 (O. XVII. r. 2) and that the application was maintainable under sect. 103, the present rule.(8) And generally, if time is given to do an act and it is not performed, O. XVII. r. 3 applies, otherwise r. 2 of the latter Order. See notes to these two rules, post. Sect. 38 of Act XV. of 1882 did not preclude a plaintiff, whose suit had been dismissed for default, from applying under this rule to have the order of dismissal set aside. He had two separate remedies under different enactments. If he applied for a new trial under sect. 38, he had to do so in eight days; if he applied under this rule, he had to do so in thirty days.(9) The rule applies to proceedings before the Court to which a reference is made under the Land Acquisition Act.(10)

"Fresh suit."—A plaintiff is only precluded from instituting a fresh suit where the previous suit was rightly dismissed under r. 8, for it is only to such a case that r. 9 applies.(1) Nextly, assuming that the case was one to which the provisions of r. 8 properly apply, the statutory bar raised by this rule only applies where the cause of action in the two suits is the same. This is a matter to be determined on the facts of each particular case.(2) It has been held that while dismissal of a suit under sect. 102 of the last Code (now represented by r. 8 of this Order) is not intended to operate in favour of the defendant as res judicata, yet when read with sect. 103 of that Code (now represented by this rule) it precludes a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action, referring to the grounds on which the plaintiff asked the Court to decide in his favour.(3)

"Reasonable cause."—This must be determined according to the facts of each particular case. See notes to r. 13, post.(4) Where when his suit is dismissed for default of appearance under r. 8, the plaintiff applies for its restoration, the defendant cannot contest the application in limine as one which cannot be entertained at all under this rule by showing that at the time of the dismissal there was an appearance by the plaintiff; but as an answer to the application on the merits, the defendant can raise the contention that the plaintiff was not prevented from appearing, because, in fact, he did appear.(5)

Appeal.—If the plaintiff successfully applies under this rule, no appeal lies from the order directing the suit to be readmitted; (6) though under the last Code an appeal was held to lie against an order rejecting an application under sect. 588, clause (8) of that Code; and an appeal is given by O. XLIII. r. 1 (c). But it is not every order dismissing an application which is open to appeal, but only an order rejecting an application to have the dismissal of a suit set aside.(7)

An appellate or revisional authority should not lightly interfere with an order of restoration of a case dismissed for default, but should do so only upon very strong grounds.(8) decision.(1) In this case a suit was dismissed for default under r. 8 on non-appearance by a plaintiff whose death was not known to the Court. His son applied under r. 9; and an order was made setting aside the dismissal. The respondent applied for revision under sect. 115; and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner reversed that order and on review confirmed the reversal on the ground that the order dismissing the suit was proper under r. 8 and that the application by the appellant (the son of the deceased plaintiff) had not been within time, and that O. 22, r. 3 only applied to a pending suit. The Privy Council held that the rulings of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner were vitiated by applying to a dead man rules which referred only to a defaulter, and that the order setting aside the dismissal was correct, and that "an abuse of the process of the Court" within the meaning of sect. 151 had occurred and that (apart from any section) any Court might rightly have considered itself possessed of inherent power to rectify the mistake made in inadvertently dismissing the suit.

Procedure in case of non-attendance of one or more of several plaintiffs.

10. Where there are more plaintiffs than one, and one or more of them appear, and the others do not appear, the Court may, at the instance of the plaintiff or plaintiffs appearing, permit the suit to proceed in the same way as if all the plaintiffs had appeared, or make such order as it thinks fit. [s. 105.

Procedure in case of non-attendance of one or more of several defendants.

11. Where there are more defendants than one, and one or more of them appear and the others do not appear, the suit shall proceed, and the Court shall, at the time of pronouncing judgment, make such order as it thinks fit with respect to the defendants who do not appear. [s. 106.]

Non-attendance of one or more of several plaintiffs or defendants.—These rules correspond with sect. 116 of the Code of 1859. There is nothing in the latter section which conflicts with or limits the operation of sect. 108 (now r. 13), and the application of sect. 108 is not limited to the case of a sole defendant who has not appeared, or where there are more defendants than one, and none of them has appeared.(2)

Consequence of non-attendance, without sufficient cause shown, of party ordered to appear in person.

12. Where a plaintiff or defendant, who has been ordered to appear in person, does not appear in person, or show sufficient cause to the satisfaction of the Court for failing so to appear, he shall be subject to all the provisions of the foregoing [s. 107.]

The question, however, whether the decree was ex parte against the absent defendants was, according to the judgment of Hobhouse, J., not necessary for the decision.

rules applicable to plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, who do not appear.

Non-appearance in person when ordered.—This rule corresponds to sect. 117 of the Code of 1859. A person failing to appear in person in obedience to an order to that effect may, in the case of a plaintiff, have his suit dismissed, or, in the case of a defendant, have the suit decided ex parte against him, notwithstanding that his pleader is present.(1) An appeal, it was held, would lie from an ex parte decree passed under the corresponding section.(2)

Setting aside Decrees ex parte.

Setting aside decree ex parte against defendant.

13. In any case in which a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside; and if he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served, or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him upon such terms as to costs, payment into Court or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit:

Provided that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such defendant only it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants also.

Object of rule.—The first object and purpose for which Courts sit is, of course, that the parties shall be heard; and therefore the object of this rule is to ensure, within reasonable limits as to public convenience, that every defendant shall have a hearing.(3) Similar provisions exist in the procedure of the English (4) and United States (5) Courts, the general rule being that, apart from cases where the defendant has not been properly notified of the hearing, that every decree may be set aside for unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing the party from defending or prosecuting, or for fraud practised by the successful party in obtaining the judgment, or for mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.(6) Applications of this character should therefore always be disposed of as substantial justice may require, and even where there is a doubt the benefit should be given to the applicant and the decree set aside.(1) Further, the Court has an inherent power to deal with an application to set aside an order made ex parte, and to set it aside upon a proper cause being substantiated.(2)

Setting aside of decrees.—The Code provides several ways in which decrees can be set aside. Firstly, by proceedings under this and similar provisions where the order has been passed in the absence of the parties or either of them.(3) An application to set aside an ex parte order is not, strictly speaking, an application for a rehearing, although it may result in it.(4) Other modes are by application for review before the Court passing the decree, or by appeal to a superior Court.(5) These are proceedings in the suit. Except in case of fraud, a separate suit does not lie to set aside a decree.(6) A suit will lie to set aside an ex parte fraudulent decree, although no endeavour has been made to get the decree set aside and the suit revived under this rule ; (7) or after such endeavour has been made and the application has been dismissed,(8) the reason being that this rule limits the attention of the tribunal to specific matters, and, instead of subjecting to inquiry the radical question involved, they assume the existence of a real suit. A Court has no power to restore an ex parte decree once set aside.(9)

"In any case."—These words are very wide, and the section, under this and the last Code, is so worded as to exclude the doubt which was entertained under the Codes of 1859 and 1877, whether sect. 119 of the former Code and sect. 108 of the latter applied only to cases where the defendant had never appeared, or whether they applied also to cases where a defendant had been present on a first, but had been absent on an adjourned, hearing.(10) Where, however, it was contended that a decree was not ex parte if the defendant has once appeared, it was held that there was no ground for so limiting the meaning of the words of the last Code, and that a decree is ex parte if it was made at an adjourned hearing in the absence of the defendant, whether the defendant has or has not appeared at an earlier stage of the case. The present rule therefore applies to every case in which a decree is passed ex parte, either by reason of his non-appearance at the first or at an adjourned hearing.(1) The former section was held to apply to proceedings under Ch. VII. of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act,(2) and to execution proceedings where the order amounts to a decree under sect. 47, ante.(3)

The rule, moreover, is not limited to the case of a sole defendant, or, where there are several defendants, to cases where none of them have appeared.(4) The fact that an order under r. 7 has been made against a defendant and has not been appealed against, is no objection to an application being made by him under this rule.(5) And it has been held that the fact that an appeal from an ex parte decree is pending will not preclude the defendant (against whom the decree was passed) from applying under this rule for an order to set it aside.(6) Sect. 37 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV. of 1882) does not apply to an ex parte decree. An application to set aside such a decree passed by a P. S. C. C. falls within this rule.(7) Satisfaction of an ex parte decree does not disentitle a judgment-debtor from applying to a Court to set it aside.(8) Neither this rule nor any other portion of the Chapter of the last Code in which this rule appeared applied to execution proceedings.(9) Nor does the rule apply where the case has been dismissed, not for default by non-appearance, but for something else, such as cases falling under O. XVII. r. 3, post.(10) in the presence of the first party and subject to cross-examination by him.(1) Proof in support of the application may be given either by the oral testimony of the petitioner or by petition supported by an affidavit.(2) And if the requirements of the rule are carried out the application cannot be refused on other grounds.(3) A failure to make an application under this rule will not affect any other remedies which the party may possess.(4)

"Duly served."—See as to this O. V., ante, and notes thereto,(5) also as to substituted service case cited.(6) When the rule speaks of the summons not being duly served, it refers, it was held, to service on that defendant only who complains, and does not refer to service on his co-defendants.(7) Even if the summons be properly served, the Court may restore the suit if it was not served in sufficient time to enable the defendants to appear and answer.(8) On similar principles an order was set aside as irregular, it having been made in the absence of one of the parties to whom no intimation had been given of the day when the case would be heard.(9) It is the duty of the Court to serve the summons of the registration of the suit. Where, before the admission of a suit, one of the proposed defendants had appeared by a pleader on an application for his appointment as guardian ad litem to a minor defendant, it was held that this did not absolve the Court from serving him with a copy of the plaint and notice of the date fixed for hearing, after the plaint had been admitted.(10) The burden is upon the petitioner to satisfy the Court that the summons was not duly served on him.(11)

"Sufficient cause."—The affirmative provisions in rr. 9, 13, and O. XLI. r. 19, that a plaintiff or appellant (as the case may be) may prove that he was "prevented by sufficient cause" from appearing or attending when his suit or appeal was called on and dismissed, do not imply the negative, namely, that an application for restoration cannot be granted unless sufficient cause is shown. The effect of the enactments is that, if sufficient cause is shown, restoration is made obligatory on the Courts, there being no discretion in the matter; whereas in other cases the merits of the applicant's case will form an important element for consideration when the Court is asked to exercise its discretion.(1) The Court has to determine the sufficiency of the cause, and this is a question not of law but of fact dependent upon the circumstances of each particular case.(2) No case can therefore be an authority in another, though previous decisions may sometimes help as a guide to Courts in determining what is sufficient cause.(3) The rule should in this respect receive a liberal construction (4) so as to promote the ends of justice, it being the spirit and policy of the law to give every party an opportunity of being heard, except in cases of inexcusable fault and neglect, when the Court has, as already pointed out, a discretion to restore, even though the case be not such as render restoration obligatory upon it. It is, however, a general principle that the default will not be opened for reasons affecting a co-defendant only who does not join in the application.(5)

"Court."—The Court remains the same though the presiding officer may be different, and a Judge can therefore revive a suit tried by his predecessor.(6) But a Judge can only set aside a decree of his own, but not that of a superior Court.(7) If the ex parte decree is made by a Court on appeal, the Court which passed the original decree appealed against cannot be asked to set it aside.(8) After appeal filed the power to set aside the original decree becomes vested in the Appellate Court.(9)

"Decree."—There was a difference of opinion under the last Code as to the meaning of this term. It was held both that the words "decree" and "suit" in this section must be taken to mean the whole decree against all defendants (where there are several) and the entire suit; (10) as also that the word "decree" referred to is the decree described in the first sentence of the section, viz. the decree passed ex parte against the defendant who has not appeared; and that the words "shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit" meant that a day is to be appointed for proceeding with the suit so far as the defendant, who has applied to the Court under the provisions of this section, is concerned.(1) No difficulty arose where there was only one defendant, or where, if there were several defendants, an application was successfully made by all of them. In such cases the whole decree against the defendant, or all the defendants, was set aside. The question arose where there were several defendants, and one or more of several (but not all) applied successfully, whether the whole decree was or should be set aside against all the defendants, or only the decree so far as it affected the defendant or defendants who applied. In this connection two sets of circumstances required consideration; (a) where an application was made by one or more defendants to set aside a decree which had been made ex parte against all defendants, none having appeared; (b) where a similar application was made in a case where some of the defendants had appeared and contested the suit and some had not appeared, and a decree was passed against all the defendants. Any interpretation of the section which led to the conclusion that a Court must in all cases set aside the decree against all defendants, or could not in any case do so, led to difficulties. Some of the defendants might not object, and in fact might have no ground for objecting to the decree, and the Court would not be justified in such case in reopening the whole suit.(2) On the other hand, if the Court's power was strictly limited to setting aside the decree as against the defendant who applied, difficulties equally arose.(3) For instance, the relief given might be joint and indivisible.

It was therefore held that though "decree" meant "whole decree," and

As regards the citation of cases under the Code of 1859, Dwarkanath Mitter, J., in the first-mentioned case, pointed out that the language of s. 58, Act X. of 1859, and of s. 119 of the Code of 1859 were very nearly similar; and except that the word "judgment" is used instead of "decree" in the Code of 1859, the provisions of s. 119 of that Code are similar to those of the present section. Therefore, in accordance with the observation of Aikman, J., Bhura Mal v. Har Kishan Das, supra, at pp. 395, 396, the earlier decisions were of use.

(2) Huro Krishno Doss v. Motee Chand Baboo, 8 W. R. 260, 261 (1867). Some of the defendants may not object, and, in fact, may have no ground for objecting, to the decree: Dookhee Khan v. Rajessuree Ranee, 15 W. R. 371 (1871); and see Bhura Mal v. Har Kishan Das, 24 A., at pp. 390–391 (1902).

thus the Court had power to set aside the whole decree against all defendants, the Court was not bound in every case to set aside the decree against all the defendants.(1) It would do so where the decree was really one decree, proceeding upon a common ground (2) and was indivisible; (3) but it might refuse to do so where the decree, though nominally one, really consisted of several decrees against several parties.(4) Where the question involved in a case was whether the liability of the defendants was joint or several, and in such case the ex parte decree was set aside, on the application of some of several defendants the entire decree was set aside.(5) Similar conclusions were arrived at by Aikman, J., in whose opinion "decree" meant the ex parte decree referred to in the opening words of the section, and who held that when the decree was one and indivisible it must be set aside as a whole or not at all; and that the Court must be assumed to have the power to set aside the whole decree, if either the decree was from its nature one and indivisible, or if in order to give to the defendants against whom an ex parte decree has to be pronounced the relief to which they are entitled, it must be set aside as a whole.(6) The Calcutta High Court held that the Court might set aside the whole decree even where one or more of the defendants had appeared and contested the suit, while in the case of the remaining defendant or defendants the decree had been passed ex parte.(7) A contrary view was taken in the Bombay High Court; (8) and Stanley, J., and Burkitt, J., in the Allahabad High Court (9) reserved their opinions on the point.

The proper rule is that now enacted by the proviso, viz. that relief is ordinarily to be given only to the party who is entitled to and applies for it. If, however, in order to give such relief or for other purpose it is necessary to set aside the decree as against others also, this will be done as in cases where it is not possible to sever the decree into parts as separately affecting the parties respectively.

"Terms."—The Court may set aside the decree upon such terms as it thinks fit.(1) The Court has a full discretion in the matter. If the defendant is not at all in fault, and has a sufficient defence, there does not appear to be any reason why he should be put on terms. In other cases terms may be imposed. The Court may direct payment of all previous costs in the action as a condition precedent to setting aside the decree; it may order a party to give security for those likely thereafter to be incurred; it may direct him to pay the decretal amount into Court; (2) or it may make such other order as it thinks fit. So a decree may be set aside on condition that the defendant should find a surety who would be responsible for any amount that might be found due from the defendant by any decree which might subsequently be made.(3)

When a judgment is ordered to be set aside upon terms, the conditions must be complied with within the time fixed or the judgment will remain in force as if the order setting it aside had not been made. Where a decree was set aside upon terms of a certain payment by a given date, it was held on appeal that the Court had jurisdiction to extend the time for payment or pass a fresh conditional order setting aside the decree upon terms.(4)

Effect of setting aside decree.— If the decree is set aside, this necessarily carries with it a reversal of any order previously made under r. 7 refusing to allow the party to appear and defend the suit.(5) The position is the same as when the suit was first instituted. As regards proceedings subsequent to the decree set aside, it is well settled that where in execution the decree-holder is himself the auction-purchaser the sale cannot stand if the decree be subsequently set aside.(6) There is, however, a distinction between this case and that where a third party is the auction-purchaser.(7) A sale having duly taken place in execution of a decree in force at the time cannot afterwards be set aside as against a bonâ fide purchaser not a party to the decree, on the ground that, on further proceedings, the decree has been, subsequently to the sale, reversed by an appellate Court.(8) And the same principle applies where the decree is set aside by the Court of first instance under this rule. When a decree has been set aside under this rule it cannot be taken to be revived in any subsequent proceeding and the principle of sect. 144 cannot be extended to it.(1) As to whether the order setting aside the decree at the instance of one defendant reopens the case against all the others, see notes to "Decree."

"Proceeding with the suit."—The case begins again in the ordinary way, as if no decree had been passed. The burden and mode of proof is just the same as it would have been if the decree had not been passed.(2) The evidence should be recorded de novo, as that taken in the defendant's absence at an ex parte hearing cannot be used against him at the rehearing.(3)

Appeal. Revision. Review.—When an application under this rule is rejected, an appeal lies by the defendant against the order of rejection.(4) But the order passed on appeal is final,(5) and therefore no second appeal lies.(6) And if the defendant applies unsuccessfully under this rule and does not appeal against the order, he cannot, on appeal against the original ex parte decree, obtain the relief which he might have got on an appeal from the order of rejection under this rule, but for which he did not apply.(7) The defendant, however, may appeal under sect. 96 against the ex parte decree without previously taking any steps to have it set aside under this rule.(8) Where, however, an application under this rule is made and refused, the party may appeal from the order under O. XLIII. r. 1 (c), and the order made on such appeal is final. But if there is no appeal from the order refusing to interfere under this rule, and the party prefers an appeal against the original ex parte decree, the Appellate Court cannot remand the case on the ground that the party had not a proper opportunity of being heard. All that it can do is to deal with the case on the merits, on the materials in the record.(9) A Full Bench of the same High Court has, however, more recently held that when a suit is decided ex parte, an Appellate Court, to which an appeal from the decree is preferred under sect. 540 (now sect. 96), has jurisdiction to reverse the decree of the lower Court on the ground that such Court was wrong in proceeding to decide the suit ex parte and remand the suit for rehearing.(10) It is not, however, open to the plaintiff to prefer an immediate appeal from an order setting aside his decree.(11) And though there is some authority to the contrary,(12) the better and more recent opinion is that such an order (ordinarily

ORDER X.

Examination of Parties by the Court.

1. At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall ascertain from each party or his pleader whether he admits or denies such allegations of fact as are made in the plaint or written statement (if any) of the opposite party, and as are not expressly or by necessary implication admitted or denied by the party against whom they are made. The Court shall record such admissions and denials. [s. 117.]

Ascertainment whether allegations in pleadings are admitted or denied.

2. At the first hearing of the suit, or at any subsequent hearing, any party appearing in person or present in Court, or any person able to answer any material questions relating to the suit by whom such party or his pleader is accompanied, may be examined orally by the Court; and the Court may, if it thinks fit, put in the course of such examination questions suggested by either party. [s. 118.]

Oral examination of party, or companion of party.

3. The substance of the examination shall be reduced to writing by the Judge, and shall form part of the record. [s. 119.]

Substance of examination to be written.

4. (1) Where the pleader of any party who appears by a pleader or any such person accompanying a pleader as is referred to in rule 2, refuses or is unable to answer any material question relating to the suit, which the Court is of opinion that the party whom he represents ought to answer, and is likely to be able to answer if interrogated in person, the Court may postpone the hearing of the suit to a future day and direct that such party shall appear in person on such day. [s. 120.]

Consequence of refusal or inability of pleader to answer.

(2) If such party fails without lawful excuse to appear in person on the day so appointed, the Court may pronounce judgment against him or make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit.

Examination of parties.—Rules 2 and 3 correspond, with some alterations, with s. 125 of the Code of 1859. As to these, vide post. After the Court has ascertained what is admitted and denied under r. 1, it may proceed to an oral examination under the next rule. This rule contemplates the case of a suit at the first or subsequent hearing in which a party has appeared at the proper time, not a case where a party has not so appeared.(1) Where, however, a defendant appears by pleader or in person, the fact that he is not prepared to put in a written statement does not warrant the trial of a suit ex parte. The Judge should in that case ascertain what are the matters in issue by an examination of the defendant under this rule.(1) The object of this examination is not to take evidence or to ascertain what is to be the evidence in the case, but to see whether a cause of action exists, what are the matters in dispute, and, if necessary, to allow an amendment of the pleadings.(2) Under the Code of 1859, provision was made for the examination of three persons, viz. the party, pleader, or companion of either. R. 2 now excludes the pleader, though r. 4 contemplates his examination. Under the Code of 1859, the examination was (unless the pleader was the person examined) to be on oath or affirmation. But as this provision has been omitted, the examination may now take place without oath or affirmation.

R. 4 provides for the appearance of a party, not to give evidence in the ordinary way, but to put the Court in possession of information necessary to the framing of issues or other points in the conduct of the case. The power given is discretionary, the intention of the section being to enable the Court not only to get obscure points cleared up by obtaining information from either of the parties,(3) but also, if possible, to get admissions so as to narrow down the issues.(4) If the party does not appear, the Court may pass a decree (5) against the defaulting party, but this can only be done if the pleader has previously thereto refused or been unable to answer a material (6) question.(7) If the plaintiff is in default the Court may dismiss his suit. If it be the defendant, the question arises whether the Court can or should decree the plaintiff's suit without any evidence in support of his claim.(8) Apparently the Court has power to do so.(9) The Court, however, is not bound to pass a decree; it may pass any order it thinks fit. The amended section substitutes "pronounce judgment" for "pass a decree." Apparently, however, the two phrases are meant to intend the same thing. R. 4 is of a penal character, and it is therefore incumbent on the Court which professes to act under it to take care that the contingency contemplated by it has in fact occurred.(10)

ORDER XI.

Discovery and Inspection.

[s. 121.]

Discovery by interrogatories.

1. In any suit the plaintiff or defendant by leave of the Court may deliver interrogatories in writing for the examination of the opposite par*ties* or any one or more of such parties, and such interrogatories when delivered shall have a note at the foot thereof stating which of such interrogatories each of such persons is required to answer: Provided that no party shall deliver more than one set of interrogatories to the same party without an order for that purpose: Provided also that interrogatories which do not relate to any matters in question in the suit shall be deemed irrelevant, notwithstanding that they might be admissible on the oral cross-examination of a witness.

Discovery.—The provisions as to discovery have been remodelled in conformity with the present English Rules, and the English decisions will be more closely applicable. This is O. 31, r. 1. It does not apply to rent-suits in Bengal [sect. 148, clause (a), Act VII. of 1885]. The words "through the Court" have been omitted. Other amendments are noted, post. According to the former English practice, actions were instituted to obtain discovery. Under the present practice these can be rarely necessary.(1) Order 31 of the Judicature Act Rules, following the extended principles of the Court of Chancery, now gives power to the Court in all suits to order discovery in aid of the action.(2) This part of the Code closely follows the English Rules. The main object of administering interrogatories is to save expense by obtaining admissions from the opposite party.(3) A plaintiff may interrogate with a view to obtain information or admissions in support of his own case, and this right extends with proper qualifications not only to his original case, but also to any answer which he has to make to the defendant's case.

But the right is always subject to the qualification that the interrogatories must be directed to a case on which the plaintiff has already determined and to which he has committed himself. He cannot be allowed to put fishing questions in order to try whether he can discover any flaw in the defendant's case or suggest any answer to it.(1) Discovery is not limited to giving the party a knowledge of that which he does not already know, but includes the getting an admission of anything which he has to prove on an issue between himself and his opponent; (2) to facilitate proof or save expense; (3) and to diminish the burden of proof.(4) So one party may be asked as to any admissions he may have made tending to support his opponent's cause of action.(5) And discovery may be had of the names of persons to make them parties, and the names and securities of prior incumbrances.(6) The interrogatory must be as to facts, and must not ask for conclusions of law, inference of facts, or construction of a document.(7) In short, a party is entitled to discovery of every fact which makes out his own case or shows that he is in the right, and this includes specific allegations in the nature of a replication to an anticipated defence. He is not, however, entitled to discovery of matters which support his opponent's case or show that his opponent is right. It has been held that he cannot ask the opposite party by what evidence he intends to support his case.(8) But in a suit for the recovery of the amount on a hundi alleged to have been drawn and accepted by the defendant in consideration of a loan, it has been recently held in the Calcutta High Court that a party is entitled to interrogate on facts directly in issue in the pleadings and that therefore the defendant was entitled to discovery of all necessary details, including the names and addresses of the persons by whom it was presented.(9) In this country it was formerly held that interrogatories viewed as machinery for eliciting facts bearing upon issues arising in suits were intended only to have a limited operation.(1) So though English authorities establish that a plaintiff may interrogate the defendant in order that he may know what case he has to meet—not the evidence but what the defence is—such interrogatories are really framed to anticipate or supply defects of pleading. But the system of procedure in this country, it was held, was different. Two modes were held to be specially provided for meeting the difficulty in question. If the pleading was too vague the Court might require a further and fuller written statement under the section corresponding with O. VIII. r. 9. The other method referred to was that provided by the Code in the settlement of issues. Interrogatories should not in such a case, it was held, be resorted to in this country.(2) So again it was held that sect. 134 of the last Code indicated that in a case falling within it a party should proceed, not by way of interrogatories, but according to the procedure laid down in that section, and that the Code did not contemplate that a party should be compelled to give discovery of documents by means of interrogatories or otherwise the relevancy of which was denied.(3) Further particulars may now be demanded under O. VI. r. 5, but there can be no doubt that the framers of the present Code intended to approximate the two systems as far as possible.

Time for delivery of interrogatories.—The former Code contained the words "at any time," which have now been omitted. In England a plaintiff is hardly ever allowed discovery before statement of claim, for from the earliest times the Court has set its face against allowing discovery for the purpose of fishing out a case,(4) and this must always be so under the Code where a suit is not instituted until after the presentation of a plaint.(5) In Common Law actions the proper time for discovery was not until after defence, for until then it was not usually possible to say what was really material. But a plaintiff has been allowed to interrogate before defence, and in the Chancery Division it is common practice to allow a plaintiff discovery before defence.(6) And the Court has a discretion to allow this under this rule. The same principles which prohibit discovery before the plaintiff has stated his case apply to a defendant. As a rule, therefore, in England a defendant will not be allowed general discovery before putting in his defence,(7) and this was laid down as an absolute rule in all cases by the second paragraph of the former section. This portion of the former proviso has been omitted and the English practice will be followed. The same procedure may be adopted in miscellaneous proceedings after decree. Interrogatories as to accounts pending or to make the judgment available, or to find out how the property in cases of mesne profits has been managed, have been allowed, and no doubt will be admitted under the Code.(1)

(2) Ali Kader v. Gobind Dass, 17 C. 840 (1890); it may, however, be considered questionable whether such differences as exist in the procedure are sufficient to deprive a party, of the right to use all his remedies; O'Kinealy, C. P. C., Notes to s. 125. The circumstances of litigation in this country have undoubtedly cast upon the Courts, in regard to pleadings, some responsibilities which do not find a counterpart in English practice; but that is no reason for excluding the very material assistance which the parties can render in giving precision to the points in issue.

Leave.—Application should be made on petition in Chambers, the order being that the plaintiff be allowed to interrogate.(2). It was held to be the duty of the Court to determine whether the applicant should be allowed to interrogate, but not to determine at that stage what questions the opposite party should be compelled to answer.(3) But see now next rule. In giving leave the Court, as a rule, decides nothing as to the specific interrogatories, but only that there is a case for interrogating the party, that the interrogatories may possibly be relevant, that their genuine character is not improper, and that their administration is not sought for the mere purpose of annoyance. Where the party on being served refuses to answer them the Court enters upon a considered adjudication under r. 11, post, and the resulting order may be enforced under r. 21. The grant of leave to one party to deliver interrogatories to another does not amount to an order requiring the other party to answer them; for that party may perhaps have good ground for refusing to answer them or some of them (r. 6). Leave granted is, therefore, not an order to answer within the meaning of r. 21 entailing a dismissal or striking out a defence.(4)

"Interrogatories."—For form of interrogatories, see Schedule IV. 123 of last Code and case cited,(5) and r. 4, post. Interrogatories are only affidavits obtained in a particular way, and the party wishing to use them must put them in as his evidence.(6) See as to their use, r. 22, post.

"Opposite parties."—Primarily this is a party on the other side of the record to the applicants.(7) A party not on the other side of the record is an opposite party within the meaning of the rule if between him and the applicant there is some right to be adjusted in the action, which in Chancery might often be the case between two plaintiffs or two defendants.(8) But defendants were refused leave to interrogate co-defendants who had put in no defence, there being no issue between them.(1)

In England formerly the decisions established that an infant, by reason of incapacity, could not be interrogated,(2) nor could he be made to give discovery of documents,(3) nor could such orders be made against a next friend (4) or guardian ad litem (5) as such, neither having the status of a party as that term is understood in the rules dealing with the subject. Now, however, r. 23 makes the order applicable to infant plaintiffs and defendants, and to the next friends and guardians ad litem of persons under disability.(6)

The Bombay High Court (7) has, however, in the case cited, applying the present English rule, held that an affidavit of documents may be required from a minor defendant, though the Judge stated that he did not decide that a next friend or guardian of an infant could be directly ordered to make an affidavit of documents. It has, however, been pointed out (8) that the order as made was invalid (the guardian ad litem being willing to make an affidavit) and that the affidavit was in reality to be made by the guardian, and the Calcutta High Court has in the case cited held that a minor cannot be compelled to give discovery under sect. 129 of the former Code, nor on the same principle (viz., his incapacity) could he be interrogated under the section corresponding to this rule; nor could his next friend or guardian be considered an "opposite party" upon whom such interrogatories can be served within the meaning of that section. It has, however, been said that a guardian ad litem may under circumstances be made a party for the purpose of obtaining discovery from him.(9) But even in this case, which was an exceptional one, it was held that where the guardian had been made a party defendant for purposes of discovery, the discovery was not intended to include the right to administer interrogatories Particular interrogatories to be submitted.

2. On an application for leave to deliver interrogatories, the particular interrogatories proposed to be delivered shall be submitted to the Court. In deciding upon such application, the Court shall take into account any offer, which may be made by the party sought to be interrogated, to deliver particulars, or to make admissions, or to produce documents relating to the matters in question, or any of them, and leave shall be given as to such only of the interrogatories submitted as the Court shall consider necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs.

Submission of interrogatories. - This rule, which is new, is taken from O. 31, r. 2. Under this rule the Judge has not, it has been said,(2) to settle the interrogatories, but to decide what should be administered. Allowing an interrogatory does not preclude any objection being taken in the answer under r. 6, post.(3) Where some have been allowed and some refused, application may be made for leave to deliver further interrogatories (4) In the undermentioned cases, defendant undertaking to make admissions, leave was refused (5) and admissions having been refused, leave was given.(6)

Costs of interrogatories.

3. In adjusting the costs of the suit inquiry shall at the instance of any party be made into the propriety of exhibiting such interrogatories, and if it is the opinion of the taxing officer or of the Court, either with or without an application for inquiry that such interrogatories have been exhibited unreasonably, vexatiously, or at improper length, the costs occasioned by the said interrogatories and the answers thereto shall be paid in any event by the party in fault.

Costs.—This is taken from O. 31, r. 3, and does not apply to rent-suits in Bengal (vide r. 1, ante).

any opposite party may apply for an order allowing him to deliver interrogatories to any member or officer of such corporation or body, and an order may be made accordingly.

Corporations and Companies.—English O. 31, r. 5. Does not apply to rent-suits in Bengal (vide ante, r. 1). The English rule is practically the same except that instead of the word "suit," it uses the words "cause or matter," which also appear in O. 31, r. 1 of the English rules, and is identical with that under the C. L. P. Act except that "member" is added. The old practice in Chancery was to make him a party for the purpose of discovery, but this can no longer be done.(1) As to body corporate, or other body; Crown; (2) foreign sovereigns; (3) liquidator; (4) see cases cited.(5) The secretary of a corporation or company is, as a rule, the proper person to answer, and it was the practice of Jessel, M.R., not to direct a member to answer unless there was no officer who had a competent knowledge of the facts.(6) The officer or member is the representative or alter ego of the body for the purposes of answering the interrogatories.(7) It is not his answer but the answer of the body, and, therefore, there is no obligation either to disclose his knowledge, or to obtain and disclose the knowledge of other servants or agents of the body acquired by him or them otherwise than in the course of his or their employment.(8) As regards discovery and production of documents, this is obtained by an order against the body for an affidavit of documents in its possession, to be made by the secretary, clerk, or other proper officer on its behalf.(9) It should, if possible, be made by some person who has personal knowledge as to documents in the possession of the body.(10) or in any way an abuse of the process of the Court, the latter may interfere at any stage. Where an ex parte order is made giving leave to interrogate, the party ordered to answer has a right to come into Court to have the order set aside if the case is one in which interrogatories should not have been allowed. When an order for administration of interrogatories is properly made, a party objecting to them may at his peril omit to answer the interrogatories to which he objects, but the more prudent course is to file his affidavit in answer stating in it his objections to answer such questions as he objects to.(1) Then the interrogating party can apply under r. 11, and the Court will make an order under that section enforceable under r. 21, post.

"Irrelevant."—There is a distinction between discovery and cross-examination.(2) Interrogatories which do not relate to any matters in question in the suit are irrelevant, notwithstanding that they might be admissible on the oral cross-examination of a witness. The discovery must be directly relevant to the matters in issue.(3) Questions going to the credit of a party as a witness are inadmissible,(4) but the right to interrogate is not confined to the facts directly in issue, but extends to any facts, the existence or non-existence of which is relevant to the existence or non-existence of the facts directly in issue.(5) Under the old Chancery practice, the discovery was material if it might be useful in obtaining any relief which the plaintiff might obtain. For the purpose of testing the relevancy to a particular issue, the case of the party making the discovery upon that issue may have to be assumed to be true.(6)

"Not exhibited bonâ fide."—Even if the interrogatories are relevant they may be objected to on the ground that they have not been put bonâ fide for the purposes of the suit. All questions put malâ fide with an ulterior object beyond that of helping the case of the party setting them should be disallowed.

"Not sufficiently material at that stage."—Material means more than relevant. A fact may be relevant but not material at a particular stage. The term means material as to the case made, and the relief prayed for at the stage of the case when discovery is sought. What is material at one stage of a case may not be material at another. The question of materiality must be tested by reference to the case made by the plaintiff's pleadings, and to what will be in issue at the hearing. Thus, where a person sued as an agent denied agency, an interrogatory as to the names of the persons to whom he had sold was refused. For the question to be decided was agency or no agency and the right to an account would only arise if the agency were proved.(7) Again, discovery relating to the quantum of damage is clearly relevant, although it may be postponed until the question of liability has been deternined. Where, therefore, the parties were at issue as to the plaintiff being ntitled to recover any damages at all, an interrogatory as to damages was eld to be premature, as the question whether there had been any wrongful ct committed and whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages had first o be determined.(1) Generally, the Court is unwilling before the right to elief is established to make an order for discovery which may be injurious to he defendant and will only be useful to the plaintiff if he succeeds in establishing his title to relief.(2) In considering whether discovery ought to be given the Court must first consider whether it will help the plaintiff at the trial. If it will not, but will only be of use if the plaintiff obtains a decree, then the Court will postpone discovery as being not sufficiently material at the stage at which it is sought.(3)

"Any other like ground."—Documents which of themselves evidence exclusively the party's own case are clearly (4) protected. He must swear that (to the best of his belief and after proper examination) they form or support or evidence or relate exclusively to his own case or title, and that they contain nothing impeaching his own case or title.(5) Then there is the question of privilege. The Evidence Act excludes certain questions, and what a party or a witness may not be asked in the witness-box he cannot be interrogated upon.(6) Interrogatories should therefore be disallowed regarding the conduct of a Judge or Magistrate in Court, or anything which came to his knowledge in Court as such, except by the order of a Superior Court; (7) communications made during marriage, except in suits between married persons; (8) affairs of State and official communications; (9) information given concerning the commission of an offence; (10) professional communications; (11) confidential communications with legal advisers.(12) Sects. 126–129 of the Evidence Act refer to communications between clients and their legal advisers alone. There are certain cases, however, for which the Act does not make specific provisions, and in which the question of privilege generally arises in applications for discovery before trial in which communications made for the purpose of litigation between third persons and the adviser, or third persons and the client for the purpose of submission to the adviser, are protected.(1) On the same principle as a witness cannot be examined so he cannot be interrogated as to questions of law.(2) Nor is he bound to discover the evidence of his case, for this would enable his unscrupulous opponent to tamper with the witnesses and to manufacture evidence in contradiction, and so shape the case as to defeat justice.(3) But according to the English authorities a party must discover the nature of his case, or the facts on which he relies in support of his case, as distinguished from the evidence of his case or the way in which he is going to make out his case.(4) According to the English rule a party is not compelled to give discovery which will tend to criminate him or expose him to the risk of any kind of punishment.(5) But in this country a witness is not excused from answering on the ground that an answer will criminate.(6) Though, therefore, a party may and should for his protection (7) claim privilege on this ground, it would appear that he may be compelled to answer an incriminating interrogatory. Objectionable or oppressive interrogatories should be disallowed.(8) The mere fact that questions would be admissible in cross-examination will not make them good as interrogatories (9)

Setting aside and striking out interrogatories

7. Any interrogatories may be set aside on the ground that they have been exhibited unreasonably or vexatiously, or struck out on the ground that they are prolix, oppressive, unnecessary or scandalous; and any application for this purpose may be made within seven days after service of the interrogatories.

Setting aside of interrogatories.—See notes to last rule. The present rule is taken from O. 31, r. 7

Affidavit in answer, filing

8. Interrogatories shall be answered by affidavit to be filed within ten days, or within such other time as the Court may allow.

Time for answer.—Order 31, r. 8. If defendant is out of the jurisdiction or there be other sufficient cause for allowing a greater length of time, a reasonable time will be given. If ten days have been originally fixed the Court may, upon an application supported by affidavit, extend the time for filing the affidavit in answer. As to objections and mode of stating them, and as to answering sufficiently, see notes to rr. 6, 11, respectively. The rule does not apply to rent-suits in Bengal (see r. 1, ante).

Form of affidavit in answer.

9. An affidavit in answer to interrogatories shall be in Form No. 3 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

No exception to be taken

10. No exceptions shall be taken to any affidavit in answer, but the sufficiency or otherwise of any such affidavit objected to as insufficient shall be determined by the Court.

Order to answer or answer further

11. Where any person interrogated omits to answer, or answers insufficiently, the party interrogating may apply to the Court for an order requiring him to answer, or to answer further, as the case may be. And an order may be made requiring him to answer or answer further, either by affidavit or by viva voce examination, as the Court may direct.

"Insufficiently." O. 31, r. 11. It does not apply to rent-suits in Bengal (see r. 1, ante). The same necessity for clear specific answers and absence of all evasion is required as in the case of pleading, as to which see O. VIII. r. 4. If the answer is evasive the usual practice is to require a further answer. Moreover, matter of supererogation should not be introduced. It is, of course, legitimate to explain or qualify an answer. But when an answer is couched in a form which makes it embarrassing, that is to say, which prevents the person who asks it from using it without having thrust upon him irrelevant matter as part of it, it is insufficient.(1) A party must answer, to the best of his knowledge, information and belief.(2) He is bound therefore to state all the information he already possesses, though he is not bound to obtain it of any one except his agents and servants. Of these he must inquire, using his best efforts bonâ fide to get the information. He must also examine documents in his possession or power if necessary.(3) The question in all cases is whether the answer is insufficient. The Court has not to go into the question of its truthfulness. If the Court is clearly satisfied (from certain sources, as to which see r. 6, ante) that the oath of the party by which he claims his protection cannot be really available for the purpose for which he puts it forward, a further answer may be ordered. But the oath should not be disregarded on mere suspicion. A substantial answer is sufficient under the present practice, the substance and not the form being that at which the Court looks. If looking at all the answers together the Court thinks that every question material to the issue has been fairly and substantially answered, though some questions have not been answered accurately, it will not require a further answer.(1) The Court may direct a viva voce examination instead of a further affidavit. A roving cross-examination is not legitimate, but the party should only be required to make such an answer as would have been sufficient if originally given in writing.(2) See notes to r. 6, ante.

Application for discovery of documents.

12. Any party may, without filing any affidavit, apply to the Court for an order directing any other party to any suit to make discovery on oath of the documents which are or have been in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question therein. On the hearing of such application the Court may either refuse or adjourn the same, if satisfied that such discovery is not necessary, or not necessary at that stage of the suit, or make such order, either generally or limited to certain classes of documents, as may, in its discretion, be thought fit: Provided that discovery shall not be ordered when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs.

Affidavit of docu ments.

13. The affidavit to be made by a party against whom such order as is mentioned in the last preceding rule has been made, shall specify which (if any) of the documents therein mentioned he objects to produce, and it shall be in Form No. 5 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

Discovery affecting documents.—Up to r. 11 the Code has dealt with the first branch of discovery, that of interrogatories. It then proceeds to deal with discovery as it affects documents. This latter discovery embraces two heads: first, discovery simply—that is, the power of compelling the opponent to disclose the documents he has in his possession; secondly, the power of compelling their production and inspection.(3) The subject of discovery simply is dealt with by this rule, which is taken from the English Order 31, r. 12. Subsequent rules deal with production and inspection. The proper mode of ascertaining what documents the adversary has is by an affidavit of documents, and not by interrogating him. An interrogatory, therefore, asking generally as to documents is not permissible. Though, according to English practice, an interrogatory asking as to specific documents is not necessarily open to objection.(4) The practice in the Calcutta High Court is that the party applies without any affidavit in support of his application; that the opposite party may be directed to make an affidavit in terms of this rule.(1) Such an application is generally granted as a matter of course, but where there is contest before a party can obtain discovery he must show that he has a good cause of action, and that the documents are relevant to the case.(2) The proviso to r. 12 has been added so as to give the Court a discretion similar to that imported in 1893 into O. 31, r. 12, of the English rules. The former section spoke of "all" the documents, and as appeared from the use of that word in the first paragraph, and from the terms of the second paragraph, the party against whom the order issued had to describe all his documents in the affidavit, even though he asserted on grounds stated by him that he could not be compelled to produce them. The words are now omitted, as the nature and extent of the discovery required depends upon the Court's order. An order for discovery can be made in a case under the Land Acquisition Act under this rule.(3)

"Party." When there are several plaintiffs all of them must ordinarily join in the affidavit, though it is possible that upon a proper case being made out the order may be limited to a particular party.(4) As to minors, lunatics, next friends, and guardians, see notes to r. 1, ante, and r. 23, post; and as to liquidators, companies, and corporations, notes to r. 5. Discovery of documents and inspection may be allowed to a plaintiff from a co-plaintiff, or to a defendant from a co-defendant if there are rights which have to be adjusted between them in the suit.(5) Where one of several parties alone makes an affidavit of documents a summons may be taken out calling upon the other parties to show cause why they should not also make an affidavit.(6)

Affidavit.—Ordinarily the affidavit should be made by the party himself.(7) The affidavit should be in the following form (see Appendix C, No. 5), with such variations as circumstances may require :—

The Advocate-General is not called upon to make discovery on oath.(1)

"Possession or power." These words do not here bear the limited meaning which they bear for the purpose of an order for production. No order for production can be made against a party unless he has directly or indirectly admitted it to be in his possession or power. Possession or power for the purpose of justifying an order for production has a narrower meaning than for the purpose of inclusion in an affidavit of documents. For the purpose of an order for production it means sole legal possession, a right and power to deal with them; (2) the sole property in them; (3) joint possession with other persons being insufficient.(4) Where the document is not in the party's sole legal possession it is sufficient for him to state the fact; it is not necessary to allege or show the refusal of the co-owners; (5) but he must state their names and the nature of their ownership.(6) But possession of the agent is possession of the principal.(7) and one partner of a firm represents the other partners for the purposes of production of documents (8) But under the present rule all documents must be included in which the party has any possession or property jointly with others, or even in which he has no property at all if they are in his corporeal possession.(9) Careful search must be made for all relevant documents in his own physical possession, and proper inquiries and efforts made as to those which are not; for instance, documents abroad,(10) and the affidavit must state not only the documents which are but those which have been in the party's possession.(11)

"Relating to any matter in question therein."—The following interpretations have been given of these words:—Documents containing information which may either directly or indirectly enable the party seeking discovery either to advance his own case, or damage that of his adversary, or which may fairly lead him to a train of inquiry which may have either of these two consequences.(1) They are not confined to such as would be admissible in evidence.(2) Every document which will throw any light on the case.(3)

Objection to production. As to what documents are privileged from production, see notes to r. 6, ante. The affidavit should set out the grounds on which privilege is claimed. But a party is not confined to the affidavit in which the claim is first set up. He is entitled to put in and use a further affidavit in support of his claim of privilege.(4)

Sealing up.—According to the Equity practice followed in the High Courts, a party may seal up such portions of otherwise material documents as he swears are privileged. A party must, however, specify what parts of the documents referred to he claims to seal up, and the grounds upon which the claim is based.(5) If he does not, though the Court has allowed an application to consider the sufficiency of the affidavit,(6) yet technically the right way of raising the question is by taking out a summons for production and inspection.(7) When the right of a party producing documents to seal certain portions of them is contested, the Court appoints an officer to whom the plaintiff states in confidence why he wants to inspect any portion of the documents sealed, and the officer, after looking at the documents, reports whether and in what way the part noted or desired to be noted is material to the case of the other party.(8)

Objection to affidavit.—When an affidavit is technically insufficient, that is, in its terms, and fails to comply with the requirements of the Code, a summons may be taken out to consider its sufficiency,(9) and the party will be ordered to amend his affidavit or file a further affidavit; (10) as where the description of documents is imperfect (11) or improperly verified; (12) or where the affidavit does not specify what the plaintiff claims to seal up, and is not in the prescribed form.(13) The only occasion where a party can be compelled to file a further affidavit of documents, is when the original affidavit is insufficient, that is, in its terms, and fails to comply with the requirements of the Code. If it is not alleged that the affidavit is defective in that respect, but that the affidavit contains statements which are untrue in fact, the party so alleging should specify the documents which he requires to see, and which have been omitted from the affidavit, and apply for an order of inspection under r. 18, post.(1) He must (as appears from that rule), in addition to the matters mentioned, show that the documents of which he claims inspection are relevant to the matters in question in the suit.(2) If he is then met by an affidavit of the other party denying possession, that is a risk which the party seeking inspection must take. For just as for the purposes of discovery an affidavit of documents denying possession is conclusive, so for the purposes of production and inspection an affidavit denying possession of such documents would be equally conclusive.(3) The Court, however, in this decision distinguishing cases on the question of privilege which stand on a different footing, was not prepared to assent to the broad proposition that, as the oath of the party is conclusive on the question of possession, so also in an application under r. 18, the affidavit of the opposite party is conclusive on the issue of relevancy.(4) An effective remedy may, however, be obtained at the hearing where possession is denied. For if on cross-examination or otherwise it appears that the party has failed to disclose or refused inspection of relevant documents in his possession, the Court will then direct immediate inspection to be given, adjourning the hearing at the cost of the person who has so evaded giving discovery.(5) If the Court is clearly satisfied on a perusal of the affidavit, the documents therein referred to, and the pleadings, that the affidavit cannot be accepted, the Court may, according to the English practice, order a further affidavit of documents. But these are the only sources to which the Court may look for this purpose.(6) It is not clear upon the Indian cases what course should be taken in such a case. The case cited below (7) seems to suggest that a further affidavit will only be ordered where the affidavit is technically insufficient in its strictest sense; and where a defendant in his written statement referred to documents not set out in his affidavit, the Court discharged a summons to consider its sufficiency, holding that as the omitted documents were sufficiently described in the written statement, an application could be forthwith made for inspection if inspection were needed.(8)

Conclusiveness of affidavit.—Where, however, a proper affidavit has been filed, either originally or as the result of an order for a further affidavit, the oath of the party swearing the affidavit is conclusive upon the questions of possession,(1) privilege,(2) and, according to English practice, relevancy.(3) The Court cannot regard the opponent's oath; the general rule in all questions of discovery being that where you have the oath of the party claiming discovery challenging the oath of the party giving discovery, the oath of the latter is for this purpose conclusive. The party seeking discovery must rest upon the affidavit, and he cannot even examine upon it, nor adduce evidence to contradict it, nor can he do this in another form by administering general interrogatories.

14. It shall be lawful for the Court, at any time during the pendency of any suit, to order the production by any party thereto, upon oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question in such suit, as the Court shall think right; and the Court may deal with such documents, when produced, in such manner as shall appear just. [s. 130.]

Production of documents.

"It shall be lawful."—This rule is taken from O. 31, r. 14. See, as to the discretion, note "Order the production." The rule enables any party who has obtained privately, by interrogatories or by affidavit of documents, knowledge of a document in the hands of his adversary, to compel production. But no order for production can be made against a party unless he has directly or indirectly admitted it to be in his possession or power. See notes to r. 13, ante.

"At any time."—Therefore, even as late as in appeal. As regards the earliest point at which the order may be made, the Court will act upon the general principles governing the time or stage for discovery. Vide ante, notes to r. 1. An order under this rule may be made even before the issues have been framed.(4)

"Order the production."—Under the Evidence Act in regard to certain documents where they are absolutely privileged, the Court has no power whatever to order production. But under this rule the Court does possess the discretion, and this discretion is to be exercised according to the practice of the Court.(5) In the case cited the Court held that though a document might not be such as passed directly between the legal adviser and the client, yet if it was of such a nature as to make it quite clear that it was obtained confidentially

C., notes to s. 130, it is said that it is not possible to say how far this rule (conclusiveness of statement as to relevancy) will apply in other cases, it being suggested that the Court should follow the rule laid down in s. 162 of the Evidence Act.

for the purpose of being used in litigation, and with a view to being submitted to legal advisers, then the Court will not compel the production of such a document.(1) In an earlier case in the same Court it was held that a Judge has no discretion to refuse to allow inspection of documents relating to matters in question in a suit, provided that they are not privileged.(2) This decision was based on Bustros v. White,(3) at which time it was held that there was no discretionary power under this rule. But in England the Court has since been given a discretion by the amendment of O. 31, r. 18 (2). And this is so here also under the second clause of r. 18, post. A party is entitled to production or inspection only when the books or papers are material and necessary to establish his cause of action. The exercise of the power under this rule cannot be delegated to a commissioner.(4) Upon an application for inspection of documents, which is objected to on the ground of immateriality, the Court will, if necessary, order them to be produced for its own inspection in order to judge of their materiality.(5) The power of refusing inspection should be exercised with great caution; and the opposite party should be allowed to inspect and take copies of the documents when they relate to matters in issue, unless they are privileged in law, relate exclusively to the case of the party producing them, and contain nothing supporting or tending to support the other side.(6) other cause or excuse which the Court shall deem sufficient for not complying with such notice, in which case the Court may allow the same to be put in evidence on such terms as to costs and otherwise as the Court shall think fit.

Notice to produce for inspection.—This is r. 15 of the English O. 31. There is a distinction between an application for general discovery of documents and an application for production of a specified document, that is, a document referred to in the pleadings or affidavits. The order for production may be made at any early stage of the case, and, unlike the case of general discovery, a defendant is entitled to inspection although he has not filed his written statement.(1) As to form of application, see No. 124, Schedule IV. of last Code and r. 17. A Judge has no power under this rule, or r. 18, to direct inspection to be given of documents unless there be as an essential preliminary to the right of inspection either the specification of a document by the party seeking the inspection, or its disclosure by the other side in the pleadings or otherwise.(2)

"Other party."—A defendant may obtain discovery or inspection, as against a co-defendant, if the latter can be regarded as an opposite party.(3) If the party on whom the notice is served should answer in the manner prescribed in the next rule, he should object to produce such documents as he considers he ought not to be compelled to produce, leaving his adversary to get an order for inspection under r. 18, post.

"And any party not complying."—The concluding words of this rule give an express power to the Judge to allow the document to be used in evidence, a power which the Judge was originally held to have by implication. As to documents referring to party's own title and "sufficient cause," see notes to rr. 1, 6, ante.(4)

The party to whom such notice is given shall, within ten days from the receipt of such notice, deliver to the party giving the same a notice stating a time within three days from the delivery thereof at which the documents, or such of them as he does not object to produce, may be inspected at the office of his pleader, or in the case of bankers' books or other books of account or books in constant use for the purposes of any trade or business, at their usual place of custody, and stating which (if any) of the documents he objects to produce, and on what ground. Such notice shall be in Form No. 8 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

Notice for inspection.—This rule is taken from O. 31, r. 17. If a party does not wish to produce documents for inspection he should refrain from delivering the notice under this rule, and wait for the plaintiff to apply for an order under r. 18, supported by an affidavit under that rule.(1) In the under-mentioned case (2) inspection was ordered to be given where the defendant kept his books, a matter now specially dealt with by the rule.

Order for inspection.

18. (1) Where the party served with notice under rule 15 omits to give such notice of a time for inspection or objects to give inspection, or offers inspection elsewhere than at the office of his pleader, the Court may, on the application of the party desiring it, make an order for inspection in such place and in such manner as it may think fit: Provided that the order shall not be made when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs.

(2) Any application to inspect documents, except such as are referred to in the pleadings, particulars or affidavits of the party against whom the application is made or disclosed in his affidavit of documents, shall be founded upon an affidavit showing of what documents inspection is sought, that the party applying is entitled to inspect them, and that they are in the possession or power of the other party. The Court shall not make such order for inspection of such documents when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs.

Application for order of inspection.—This rule is taken from O. 31, r. 18. No order will be granted unless notice has been served under r. 15.(3) The filing of an affidavit by one party under r. 13 of this Order does not preclude the other party from applying for further discovery and inspection under this rule.(4)

Affidavit in support of application.—The rule applies to every case in which the party desiring inspection is able to state of his own knowledge that the other party is in possession of documents and that they are relevant.(5)

The applicant must show inter alia that the documents of which he claims inspection are relevant to the matters in question in the suit. That appears under r. 14, because it is that rule only which gives the Court power to order production of documents relating to any matter in question in the suit, and the Court has no power to order the production of any other document.(1) The second sub-rule, which corresponds with s. 134 of the last Code,(2) is taken from O. 31, r. 18. The last sentence, which is also new, is taken from the same English rule. It is open to the other party to file an affidavit denying possession, or relevancy or claiming protection, and it seems from the English decision on the rule cited that the statements in such affidavit as to possession must be accepted by the Court as no less conclusive than if they were contained in an affidavit of documents.(3) The Court, however, in the case last cited distinguishing questions of privilege, was not prepared to accept the broad proposition, that in an application under this rule the affidavit of the opposite party would also be conclusive on the question of relevancy.(4)

19. (1) Where inspection of any business books is applied for, the Court may, if it thinks fit, instead of ordering inspection of the original books, order a copy of any entries therein to be furnished and verified by the affidavit of some person who has examined the copy with the original entries, and such affidavit shall state whether or not there are in the original book any and what erasures, interlineations or alterations: Provided that, notwithstanding that such copy has been supplied, the Court may order inspection of the book from which the copy was made.

Verified copies.

(2) Where on an application for an order for inspection privilege is claimed for any document, it shall be lawful for the Court to inspect the document for the purpose of deciding as to the validity of the claim of privilege.

(3) The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit at any time, and whether an affidavit of documents shall or shall not have already been ordered or made, make an order requiring any other party to state by affidavit whether any one or more specific documents, to be specified in the application, is or are, or has or have at any time been, in his possession or power; and, if not then in his possession, when he parted with the same and what has become thereof. Such application shall be made on an affidavit stating that in the belief of the deponent the party against whom the application is made has, or has at some time had, in his possession or power the document or documents specified in the application, and that they relate to the matters in question in the suit, or to some of them.

"Verified copies."—This rule is new, and is taken from O. 31, r. 19A.

"Privilege."—This word in the second sub-clause includes any objection to inspection, for instance irrelevancy,(1) and the word "document" includes a sealed-up portion of a document.(2)

Power to call for affidavit.—The documents referred to in the third sub-clause are documents which can be named and specified.(3) The statements are, it is conceived, as conclusive as if they were in an affidavit of documents.(4)

Premature discovery.

20. Where the party from whom discovery of any kind or inspection is sought objects to the same, or any part thereof, the Court may, if satisfied that the right to the discovery or inspection sought depends on the determination of any issue or question in dispute in the suit, or that for any other reason it is desirable that any issue or question in dispute in the suit should be determined before deciding upon the right to the discovery or inspection, order that such issue or question be determined first, and reserve the question as to the discovery or inspection.

Premature discovery.—This rule, which is taken from O. 31, r. 20, deals with the case where discovery or inspection is premature. The intention is to give the Court the power of raising and determining an issue for the exclusive purpose of deciding the right to discovery of evidence which is to be used at the trial, and therefore from the nature of the case before the hearing of the cause.(5) The provisions of this rule are not intended to come into operation until after an application has been made under r. 18, ante.(6) The practice is to take out a summons calling on the other party to show cause why an issue should not be framed.(7) Where an order is made under this rule by the Judge in Chambers, the suit should be set down for the trial of the particular issue as well as of the cause itself when it comes to a hearing before the same Judge.(8) An order under this section is not a "judgment" and no appeal lies from it.(9) and, if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended, and the party interrogating or seeking discovery or inspection may apply to the Court for an order to that effect, and an order may be made accordingly.

Default.—This rule, which is taken from English O. 31, r. 21, is a highly penal provision.(1) It is not imperative.(2) The party is only liable to, etc. There must, in the first place, be an order which has been disobeyed, and, therefore, as regards interrogatories, no action can be taken under this section until an order has been passed under r. 11, ante.(3) A case will not be dismissed, or a defence struck out, except in extreme cases, and as a last resort.(4) An order will not be made unless the Court is satisfied that the plaintiff is endeavouring to avoid a fair discovery.(5) If the parties concerned are pardanashin ladies this should be taken into account.(6) But the rule has been framed to prevent not merely contumacy but procrastination,(7) and the Court will not go on staying proceedings for ever; it may expel them altogether from the Court.(8) The Court may dismiss the suit or strike out the defence. And in the High Court the party in default is also liable to commitment for contempt.(9) Where a defence is struck out and a decree is made, as in an undefended cause, the decree is not ex parte within the meaning of O. IX. r. 13, so as to allow of an application to set it aside under that rule,(10) or in respect of the remedy of appeal.(11) It has, however, been held that a party, against whom an order has been made striking out his defence, may come in and seek to set it aside on showing good grounds.(12) This is because such an order is an interlocutory one, as regards which the Court has a wide discretion. It is, however, a different matter when such interlocutory order not having been set aside, a final decree is passed.(13) An order dismissing a suit under this rule is a decree, and is appealable,(14) and an order purporting to be made under this rule has been revised.(15) While there may be an appeal against an order dismissing a suit or a decree passed after striking out a defence, if on such appeal it be held that the order was justified, it is not open to the appellant in the latter case to enter into his defence on appeal, for otherwise he would be placed in a better position in the appeal than in the first Court.(1) The result of the defence being struck out, and the order striking it out affirmed, is that the party is placed in the same position as if he had not defended or (to use the words of the last Code) appeared and answered. This rule is the only provision under which a defence can be struck out. The Court has no power to strike out a defence for failure of the defendant to appear in time (in pursuance of an undertaking given by him to the Court) for further examination as a witness for the opposite side.(2)

22. Any party may, at the trial of a suit, use in evidence any one or more of the answers or any part of an answer of the opposite party to interrogatories without putting in the others or the whole of such answer: Provided always that in such case the Court may look at the whole of the answers, and if it shall be of opinion that any others of them are so connected with those put in that the last-mentioned answers ought not to be used without them, it may direct them to be put in.

Using answers to interrogatories at trial.

Method of using answers.—As regards this Cotton, L.J., said: (3) "Under the new rules the plaintiff can read one passage without referring to the whole even of the same paragraph, and I think no Judge would allow a defendant where he had made an admission to read with it a passage which was not connected in sense or substance with that admission, even if he had put in a statement submitting that he was entitled to do so and claiming to do so. Of course, when an admission is read everything ought to be read which is fairly connected with that admission: but I think it would be wrong for the defendant, and he would not be allowed, to try to bring in matter which was not in any way connected with the matter admitted."

Notice to admit documents.—This rule, which has been considerably remodelled, and is, with some slight alterations, the same as the English rule, is taken from O. 32, r. 2. For form of notice, see No. 127 in Schedule I. Part II. of the former Code and the next rule. A fuller form is given in the Annual Practice, Vol. II. Appendix B. No. 11. The rule is enacted for the facility of proof and saving of costs. The rule has been held to extend to all documents which a party proposes to adduce in evidence, and whether in possession or otherwise, and even though the opposite party has stated that he would not admit them (1) According to the English practice, if a party does not save all just exceptions he is precluded from objecting to the admissibility in evidence of the documents admitted.(2) Though that may sometimes be the case here, it would be necessary to consider in certain instances, e.g. a question of stamp, and possibly in others, whether the admission of the party could render that admissible which the law says should not be admitted. Further, an admission with the "saving" that a document is a copy merely dispenses with proof that it is a copy. It does not, however, dispense with proof of circumstances permitting secondary evidence being given. Admissions of documents between co-defendants to which the plaintiff is not a party cannot be entered as evidence against him.(3) If the party having notice fails to prove the documents, the party refusing to admit will not be made liable for the costs of the unsuccessful attempt.(4) This also appears from the words of the rule, which imply successful proof.

Notice to admit facts.—This section is limited to documents. Under the English practice,(5) however, and that of the Calcutta High Court,(6) notice may be given to admit specific facts, and in case of refusal to admit, the party so refusing pays the costs of proving such facts unless the Judge certifies that the refusal was reasonable. The form of notice and answer are given in the Annual Practice, Nos. 12 and 13 in Appendix B., and in forms 269 E. (1) (2) of the Calcutta High Court Rules. See as to admissions for purpose of trial Authors' Evidence Act, 4th ed. p. 349. The Code now provides in r. 4, post, for admission as to facts.

Notice to admit facts.

4. Any party may, by notice in writing, at any time not later than nine days before the day fixed for the hearing, call on any other party to admit, for the purposes of the suit only, any specific fact or facts mentioned in such notice. And in case of refusal or neglect to admit the same within six days after service of such notice, or within such further time as may be allowed by the Court, the costs of proving such fact or facts shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs: Provided that any admission made in pursuance of such notice is to be deemed to be made only for the purposes of the particular suit, and not as an admission to be used against the party on any other occasion or in favour of any person other than the party giving the notice: Provided also that the Court may at any time allow any party to amend or withdraw any admission so made on such terms as may be just.

"Not later than nine days before."—English O. 32, r. 4. This expression of time is unusual, and might be construed to be identical with "clear days," i.e., exclusively of both the day of service of the notice and the day named for hearing. The day of service is in England excluded, and the word "before" appears to exclude the day of hearing.(1) A notice to admit facts should, where practicable, supersede interrogatories.(2) This notice may be delivered with the statement of claim, and the Court cannot set it aside as improper. The defendant's only course is to refuse to answer it, which he would do at his peril as to costs.(3) Where plaintiff disregarded a notice under this rule given by the defendant, the latter was allowed to administer interrogatories.(4) parties: and the Court may upon such application make such order, or give such judgment, as the Court may think just.

Judgment.—The rule is merely permissive, and the plaintiff by not availing himself of it, and proceeding to trial in the ordinary way, does not thereby waive his right to rely, at the trial, on the admission contained in the pleadings.(1) "This rule (1875) enables the plaintiff or defendant to get rid of so much of the action as to which there is no controversy. That is the meaning of it;" (2) and the same learned Judge frequently decided that the former rule must be read as if the words "if any" were inserted after the word "question." (3) The Court will not, on motion, give judgment on admissions contained in the defence of an infant defendant nor, semble, on default of infant in filing a defence.(4) The plaintiff must have a clear case, and the mere admission or non-denial by the defendant of a right asserted by plaintiff, but which in fact has no existence in law, is not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a judgment establishing the right.(5) In any case the power of the Court is discretionary, and will not be exercised where the case cannot be conveniently tried on motion.(6)

Affidavit of signature.

7. An affidavit of the pleader or his clerk, of the due signature of any admissions made in pursuance of any notice to admit documents or facts, shall be sufficient evidence of such admissions, if evidence thereof is required.

Notice to produce documents.

8. Notice to produce documents shall be in Form No. 12 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require. An affidavit of the pleader, or his clerk, of the service of any notice to produce, and of the time when it was served, with a copy of the notice to produce, shall in all cases be sufficient evidence of the service of the notice, and of the time when it was served.

Object of rule.—The object of this rule is to enable secondary evidence of documents to be given at the trial if they are not then produced pursuant to the notice.(7) See English O. 32, r. 8.

Costs.

9. If a notice to admit or produce specifies documents which are not necessary, the costs occasioned thereby shall be borne by the party giving such notice.

ORDER XIII.

Production, Impounding and Return of Documents.

Documentary evidence to be produced at first hearing.

1. The parties or their pleaders shall produce, at the first hearing of the suit, all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power, on which they intend to rely, and which has not already been filed in Court, and all documents which the Court has ordered to be produced. [s. 188.]

(2) The Court shall receive the documents so produced: provided that they are accompanied by an accurate list thereof prepared in such form as the High Court directs. [s. 140.]

Documents to be ready.—If a plaintiff sues or relies on a document he must either produce it with his plaint or enter it on the list attached to it (O. VII. r. 14). Any document which has not been produced or entered cannot be received in evidence without leave of the Court (O. VII. r. 18; see notes thereto). And by this rule the parties must bring with them, and have in readiness at the first hearing, all the documentary evidence in their possession or power,(1) and on which they rely, and file it. But they need not file them unless they are called for.(2) The main object of this and the following rule is to prevent parties from manufacturing evidence pending the trial to meet unexpected exigencies; (3) not to shut out true and valuable evidence merely because the party had, without good and assignable cause, abstained from bringing it before the Court at the first hearing; (4) or formal evidence beyond suspicion, such as certified copies of public documents.(5)

(1) See Syed Ikram Hossein v. Ram Lochun Dutt, 23 W. R. 29 (1875) [s. 128 of the Code of 1859, though it did not contain them, and was held to be so limited].

(5) Ranchhod Hirabai v. Secretary of State, 22 B. 173 (1896); Lilabati Misrain v. Bishun Chobey, 6 C. L. J. 621 (1907).

Effect of non-production of documents.

2. No documentary evidence in the possession or power of any party which should have been but has not been produced in accordance with the requirements of rule 1 shall be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof; and the Court receiving any such evidence shall record the reasons for so doing.

Effect of non-production.—A party is bound to be prepared at all points with his documentary evidence; (1) but they need not file them unless they are called for.(2) The parties, though not entitled as of right to adduce fresh documentary evidence after the issues on the case are settled, may yet tender such evidence, stating the grounds upon which it was not tendered at an earlier stage; and the Judge may receive or reject such evidence; but the grounds on which he acts should be stated on the record.(3) If in the course of a trial something is brought to light which is entirely new, no doubt the Court framing a fresh issue would give the parties time to produce evidence in respect of that new matter.(4) As to the manner in which these provisions should be applied, see notes to last rule.

Rejection of irrelevant or inadmissible documents.

3. The Court may at any stage of the suit reject any document which it considers irrelevant or otherwise inadmissible, recording the grounds of such rejection.

"Reject."—The Court having called on the parties to produce their documentary evidence, must receive and inspect every document tendered, returning such as it considers irrelevant or otherwise inadmissible,(5) either under the Evidence Act or other Acts, such as those relating to stamp and registration. If for want of time, the Judge is then unable to inspect or consider them, he may allow them to be filed and inspect and reject them afterwards.(6) The documents returned by the Court cannot be used in evidence, or put in the record until proved or admitted, vide post. No appeal lies from an order rejecting documents, though the rejection may be impugned in the appeal from the final decree.(7)

Endorsements on documents admitted in evidence.

4. (1) Subject to the provisions of the next following sub-rule, there shall be endorsed on every document which has been admitted in evidence in the suit the following particulars, namely :—

(a) the number and title of the suit,

(b) the name of the person producing the document,

(c) the date on which it was produced, and

(d) a statement of its having been so admitted ;

and the endorsement shall be signed or initialled by the Judge.

(2) Where a document so admitted is an entry in a book, account or record, and a copy thereof has been substituted for the original under the next following rule, the particulars aforesaid shall be endorsed on the copy and the endorsement thereon shall be signed or initialled by the Judge.

Endorsements.—The sections in the last Code corresponding with this and the following rules, 6, 7, and 8, were substituted by sect. 13, Act VII. of 1888, for sects. 141 and 142 of the Code of 1882. As to admission in evidence, see notes to rr. 6 and 7, post.

Endorsements on copies of admitted entries in books, accounts and records.

5. (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1891, where a document admitted in evidence in the suit is an entry in a letter-book or a shop-book or other account in current use, the party on whose behalf the book or account is produced may furnish a copy of the entry.

(2) Where such a document is an entry in a public record produced from a public office or by a public officer, or an entry in a book or account belonging to a person other than a party on whose behalf the book or account is produced, the Court may require a copy of the entry to be furnished—

(a) where the record, book or account is produced on behalf of a party, then by that party, or

(b) where the record, book or account is produced in obedience to an order of the Court acting of its own motion, then by either or any party.

(3) Where a copy of an entry is furnished under the foregoing provisions of this rule, the Court shall, after causing the copy to be examined, compared and certified in manner mentioned in rule 17 of Order VII, mark the entry and cause the book, account or record in which it occurs to be returned to the person producing it.

Stamp.—This section was added to the last Code by sect. 13, Act VII. of 1888. A copy or extract from an entry in an account book filed under the provisions of this section and sect. 142A (now r. 7) requires no stamp.(1)

Endorsements on documents rejected as inadmissible in evidence.

6. Where a document relied on as evidence by either party is considered by the Court to be inadmissible in evidence, there shall be endorsed thereon the particulars mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of rule 4, sub-rule (1) together with a statement of its having been rejected, and the endorsement shall be signed or initialled by the Judge.

Recording of admitted and return of rejected documents.

7. (1) Every document which has been admitted in evidence, or a copy thereof where a copy has been substituted for the original under rule 5, shall form part of the record of the suit.

(2) Documents not admitted in evidence shall not form part of the record and shall be returned to the persons respectively producing them.

"Admitted in evidence."—The rules as to the admissibility of evidence will be found in the Evidence Act. Primary rules are that documents must be proved by the party relying on them,(2) unless admitted.(3) And it is not sufficient that they have not been denied by the opposite party.(4) Secondary evidence should not be accepted without sufficient reason.(5)

"Form part of the record."—The corresponding section in the last Code was added by Act VII. of 1888, sect. 13. Documents which have not been proved but simply filed in accordance with a usage in the Mofussil should not be put up with the record. It is the duty of the Judge to pass over such documents unproved, but it is also the duty of the pleader of the party against whom they are intended to be used, to insist that they should not remain on the record at all.(1) Where a document tendered in evidence in a Court of first instance, is rejected as inadmissible, but is nevertheless allowed to remain on the record of the case, the mere fact of the document remaining on the record does not make it evidence in the Appellate Court; but it must be tendered in evidence in that Court, and accepted thereby.(2)

8. Notwithstanding anything contained in rule 5 or rule 7 [s. 143.]
Court may order any document to be impounded. of this Order or in rule 17 of Order VII, the Court may, if it sees sufficient cause, direct any document or book produced before it in any suit to be impounded and kept in the custody of an officer of the Court, for such period and subject to such conditions as the Court thinks fit.

Impounding document.- Act XIV. of 1882, sect. 143 as amended (sect. 14, Act VII. of 1888). A claim was made under sect. 278 of the last Code by one L. G. R. in respect of property attached as that of H. That claim was rejected. The District Judge finding that the document under which L. G. R. claimed executed in his favour by H., was a fraudulent preference, ordered the document to be impounded, and wrote across the document in red ink "declared to be fraudulent, D. J." L. G. R. obtained a rule for the return of the document and the expunging of those words, which was made absolute, the Court ordering that the words should be expunged and the document returned, and holding that this rule does not apply to a case of this kind, where that which is challenged is not the document itself, which was admitted to be genuine, but the transaction evidenced by the document.(3)

9. (1) Any person, whether a party to the suit or not, [s. 144.]

Provided that a document may be returned at any time earlier than that prescribed by this rule if the person applying therefor delivers to the proper officer a certified copy to be substituted for the original and undertakes to produce the original if required to do so:

Provided also that no document shall be returned which, by force of the decree, has become wholly void or useless.

(2) On the return of a document admitted in evidence, a receipt shall be given by the person receiving it.

Court may send for papers from its own records or from other Courts.

10. (1) The Court may of its own motion, and may in its discretion upon the application of any of the parties to a suit, send for, either from its own records or from any other Court, the record of any other suit or proceeding, and inspect the same.

(2) Every application made under this rule shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be supported by an affidavit showing how the record is material to the suit in which the application is made, and that the applicant cannot without unreasonable delay or expense obtain a duly authenticated copy of the record or of such portion thereof as the applicant requires, or that the production of the original is necessary for the purposes of justice.

(3) Nothing contained in this rule shall be deemed to enable the Court to use in evidence any document which under the law of evidence would be inadmissible in the suit.

"The Court."—This rule, which corresponds with sect. 138 of the Code of 1859, except that the latter section empowered the Court to send for records from public officer also, applies to Appellate Courts as well as those of original jurisdiction.(1) The Judge should pass a distinct order on the application instead of recording the objectionable and meaningless order "Nutti Shamelpesh." (2) But where a party petitioned the Court to send for certain documents, and an order was made that the matter should be decided at the hearing, but no further application was made, it was held that the applicant was not entitled to appeal on the ground that the record had not been sent for.(1)

"May."—The Court has a discretion, and is not bound to send for the record,(2) though the discretion must be judicially exercised, and, as in other cases where the legislature uses the word "may," where a proper case for the exercise of the power arises, the Court should exercise it.(3) The Court will see that the facts set out in the second paragraph are made out in the affidavit. But if so the Court ought not to refuse the application merely because in its opinion the documents cannot be produced before the termination of the trial.(4) The Court is not bound to send for the whole record, but only such papers as are mentioned in the application.(5)

"Application."—This must show that the record is material; (6) that copies cannot be obtained, or that if obtainable they are insufficient, the original being necessary, as where copies cannot be attested by subscribing witness.(7) It was held that in all cases the party for whose benefit the documents have been used should be required to file copies in the record.(8)

"Other Court."—As already stated, the Court cannot now, as under the Code of 1859, send for records from public offices.(9) The record must be that of a suit or proceeding in another Court. The proper means of obtaining the other records is by summons directed to the proper officer. The Court to which the direction is issued has no discretion to refuse to send records which have been sent for by another Civil Court.(10)

ORDER XIV.

Settlement of Issues and Determination of Suit on Issues of Law or on Issues agreed upon.

Framing of issues.

1. (1) Issues arise when a material proposition of fact or law is affirmed by the one party and denied by the other. [s. 146.]

(2) Material propositions are those propositions of law or fact which a plaintiff must allege in order to show a right to sue or a defendant must allege in order to constitute his defence.

(3) Each material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other shall form the subject of a distinct issue.

(4) Issues are of two kinds: (a) issues of fact, (b) issues of law.

(5) At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall, after reading the plaint and the written statements, if any, and after such examination of the prties as may appear necessary, ascertain upon what material propositions of fact or of law the parties are at variance, and shall thereupon proceed to frame and record the issues on which the right decision of the case appears to depend.

(6) Nothing in this rule requires the Court to frame and record issues where the defendant at the first hearing of the suit makes no defence.

Issues of law and of fact.

2. Where issues both of law and of fact arise in the same suit, and the Court is of opinion that the case or any part thereof may be disposed of on the issues of law only, it shall try those issues first, and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit, postpone the settlement of the issues of fact until after the issues of law have been determined. [s. 146, sixth para.]

Materials from which issues may be framed.

3. The Court may frame the issues from all or any of the following materials:— [s. 147.]

(a) allegations made on oath by the parties, or by any persons present on their behalf, or made by the pleaders of such parties;

(b) allegations made in the pleadings or in answers to interrogatories delivered in the suit;

(c) the contents of documents produced by either party.

Court may examine witnesses or documents before framing issues.

4. Where the Court is of opinion that the issues cannot be correctly framed without the examination of some person not before the Court or without the inspection of some document not produced in the suit, it may adjourn the framing of the issues to a future day, and may (subject to any law for the time being in force) compel the attendance of any person or the production of any document by the person in whose possession or power it is by summons or other process.

Power to amend, and strike out, issues.

5. (1) The Court may at any time before passing a decree amend the issues or frame additional issues on such terms as it thinks fit, and all such amendments or additional issues as may be necessary for determining the matters in controversy between the parties shall be so made or framed.

(2) The Court may also, at any time before passing a decree, strike out any issues that appear to it to be wrongly framed or introduced.

Object and effect of issues.—The object of pleading is that each side may be made fully aware of the questions which are about to be argued in order that each may bring forward evidence appropriate to the issues.(1) The pleadings, therefore, are the first stage at which the differences between the parties are made to appear. They may contain an express admission. Pleadings, however, in this country have hitherto not been construed with the same strictness as in England, where legal assistance of a highly expert character is always available. The Courts, therefore, have refused to apply to Indian pleadings the strict rule that averments not traversed must be taken to be admitted.(2) Orders VI. and VIII. now require a stricter practice which is itself justified by the increased professional efficiency. Where, however, issues have been framed, it was held prior to this Code that averments upon which no issue have been framed must be taken to be admitted.(3) For if parties intend to raise a question they should request the Court to frame an issue upon it. Where parties in a lower Court allow a suit to be conducted as if a certain fact was admitted, they cannot afterwards in appeal question it, and recede from the tacit admission.(1) It has been said that the duty of raising issues rests under the Code on the Court, and that an admission cannot be inferred from the omission to ask the Court to raise an issue.(2) The Court no doubt frames the issues, but this is done after enquiring from the parties the propositions on which they are at variance. It is possibly the duty of a Court, if it perceives that a point which it is necessary to prove may be open to dispute, to draw the parties' attention to it, with a view to ascertain if it is contested or admitted, and if contested to raise an issue on it. If this is done and no issue is raised, then the averment must be taken to be admitted, otherwise these provisions are useless. As regards other cases, something may depend on the circumstances; but if the dictum cited was intended to be of general application, it is, with respect, submitted to be unsound.

"One party."—That is ordinarily the plaintiff on one side and the defendant on the other. An issue between co-defendants is generally not allowable.(3) In some cases, however, this may be done, as where the recording and determination of such issue is necessary to giving the appropriate relief to the plaintiff.(4) No issue can be decided between co-defendants if the suit is dismissed.(5)

"Shall." Omission to settle issues.—The Court is directed to do so, and to omit to settle in order that the parties may before the trial know to what points they would have to address themselves, is a great irregularity.(6) At the same time, if it appears that the necessary points have been raised and discussed, the omission to settle issues is not fatal to the trial of the suit.(7) The Code contemplates the settlement of issues whether there is a written statement or not, though it is not obligatory on the Court to frame issues if the defendant makes no defence.(8) And where both parties invoked the decision of the Court upon a question raised by the pleadings and the question was argued, it was held that the judgment upon it was not ultra vires because an issue was not framed embracing the whole question.(1) Where, however, a settlement of issues is considered necessary the case may be remanded on appeal for a new trial after settling and recording the points in dispute,(2) as also where the issue does not sufficiently direct the attention of the parties to the main question to be decided.(3)

On what fixed.—In the first place issues may be framed on the plaint and written statement which are the pleadings in the suit.(4) When the issues come to be stated wider questions may be propounded.(5) The Court is not bound to try the suit in the manner in which the plaint is framed, for its object is merely to bring the matter in dispute between the parties before the Court, but on the settlement of issues the Judge is to ascertain the question.(6) In fact the issues fixed, and not the pleadings, ought to guide the parties as to production of evidence.(7) The real points, however, are often missed or obscured by the infelicitous mode of drawing pleadings which sometimes prevails in the Mofussil. And it is therefore the duty of the judge to ascertain from enquiry of the parties or their pleaders the real points in dispute between them. A Court is not bound down to the language of the pleadings.(8) Issues, it has been said, may be settled even where a plaint discloses no cause of action.(9) though a Court has also in such case a discretion to reject it. A defendant is not precluded from setting up a defence which does not appear in his written statement.(10) But the issues raised should not be inconsistent with the pleadings. Thus, where the plaintiff sued alleging a deed purporting to be executed by himself to be a forgery, the Court should not admit the inconsistent issue whether it was executed under undue influence.(11) The Court may also look to interrogatories and contents of documents produced.

What should be subject of issues.—As a general rule only such averments should be made the subject of issues as are essential to support the cause of action and are denied by the defendant, or as are essential to support a plea and are denied by the plaintiff; and mere pieces of evidence which are to be adduced to enable the Court to infer the truth of a material statement ought not to be made the subject of separate issues.(1) Where a fact is expressly or impliedly admitted no issue, of course, arises, nor is proof of that fact necessary. But where the proof given falls short of legal requirements, the mere default of a party to contest a point which also falls short of an admission will not avail to cure the actual want of evidence.(2) If a plaint and its proof lead to particular issues the Court should raise them and give relief, provided they do not come by surprise on the defendant and are within the scope of and not inconsistent with the pleadings.(3) But a plaintiff will not be allowed to set up one case, and having proved another, ask issues to be raised to suit the proof.(4) See, however, notes on "Amendment of Issues," post. If a case not alleged by the plaintiff is disclosed on the evidence the Court can allow it to be set up, provided a specific issue is raised for it, and the defendant is given an opportunity of meeting it.(5)

by them.(1) Where a defendant pleaded limitation but placed that issue upon the simple fact that he himself had possession for twelve years and upwards, which issue was found against him: held it was too late for the defendant in appeal to object that that finding did not dispose of the issue of limitation.(2)

Order of disposal.—A Court is not under any obligation as to the order in which it is to try the issues which are raised before it, but may dispose of them in the way which it considers most likely to conduce to the ascertainment of the truth.(3) But issues should be tried separately, and not mixed up together.(4) Issues of law may, under the circumstances stated in r. 2, be tried first.(5)

"Nothing in this rule."—It was held under the Code of 1859, that if both parties appear, issues should be recorded, but if the defendant does not appear it is not possible to ascertain the points at which the parties are at variance. In such a case a Court does not frame issues, but hears the cases ex parte.(6) The rule expressly excludes such a case.

Amendment of issues.—It will be observed that the word "may" occurs in the early part, and the word "shall" in the concluding portion of the first paragraph of r. 5. The power of amending issues is almost the same as that given by the Common Law Procedure Act, and it has been held that a Judge is not bound to make such amendments, except for the purpose of more effectually putting in issue, and trying, the real question in controversy as disclosed by the pleadings on either side. In some cases the Courts, in their discretion, have gone beyond this, and, where no injustice would be done to either party, have allowed issues to be raised on matters which do not strictly come within the scope of the pleadings. The power to allow such amendments is given by the first part of the rule, which give a discretion, and not under the obligatory words of the latter part of the rule.(7) The power which is given to the Court by r. 5 (corresponding with sect. 141 of the Code of 1859) to modify the issues in the course of the trial, is meant to enable it to bring out the questions really arising out of the counter-averments of the parties. It is not intended that the Judge should take the case altogether out of the hands of the litigants and make for the plaintiff or defendant a case which he had no intention of making for himself.(8) A Court's power of raising additional issues is co-extensive with its power of amending plaints, and is subject to the same restrictions. A Court therefore was held not authorized by the corresponding section to this rule to frame new issues which had the effect of altering the nature of the suit.(1) A permission to a defendant to file a supplemental answer does not entitle him to make a new case or raise a fresh issue in contradiction of his former defence.(2) Every matter fairly within the scope of the plaint, if important for the decision of the substantive difference between the parties, should be framed into an issue, and the duty of framing them is thrown on the Court in order to render substantial justice, and to prevent a party suing from being remitted to a new suit, when, by a suitable order as to terms upon which amendment shall be made, the Court, by framing additional issues, can determine in the existing suit the real question in controversy between the parties.(3)

The rule says "at any time" before decree. But when there has been a hearing and settlement of issues, the Court will, ordinarily, not exercise its discretionary power to raise a new issue except on clear proof of inadvertence, or mistake, or the discovery of new matters affecting the merits not within the knowledge of the parties at the date of the former settlement of issues.(4) If the Court intends to frame an additional issue, it should do so and then fix a day for the further hearing upon such issue. It should not merely record its intention to do so and leave the actual framing for the time of giving judgment.(5) A plaint has been amended in first appeal, and the suit remanded for the determination of a fresh issue arising upon such amendment.(6) The form, however, of a suit may not allow of particular rights being declared in it.(7) An amendment may be set aside in appeal.(8)

Although, under certain circumstances, a Judge at a trial may allow amendments or raise issues other than those settled, yet when a Judge at the settlement of issues, has refused to raise a certain issue, that question ought not to be re-opened at the trial, and the Judge at the trial ought not to modify the issues so as to re-open any question which the Judge settling the issues has decided.(9) When a Judge transfers a case to his own file he is at liberty to amend the issues first laid down, and to frame additional issues, and to go into the whole case, except upon any question upon which there has been a judicial finding. (10) The first part of cl. (1) of r. 5 leaves it in the discretion of the Court to frame such additional issues as it thinks fit; but the latter part makes it imperative to frame such additional issues as may be necessary for determining the matters in controversy.(1)

Appellate Courts.—In appeal the case should be dealt with not on the mere wording of the plaint, but on the issues settled for trial, and the manner in which the case was tried by the first Court.(2) A ground of defence, which was not taken in the written statement nor made the subject of issue, was not allowed to be argued.(3) Where issues have not been settled, but the judgment states the points for consideration which appear to have been raised by the parties, then these points have been taken as the issues.(4) Where a new issue is raised in the Appellate Court, it should be done in such a way as to give the parties the fullest opportunity of producing evidence upon it.(5) See O. XLI. rr. 25, 26.

(b) that they have a substantial interest in the decision of such question as aforesaid, and

(c) that the same is fit to be tried and decided, it shall proceed to record and try the issue and state its finding or decision thereon in the same manner as if the issue had been framed by the Court; and shall, upon the finding or decision on such issue, pronounce judgment according to the terms of the agreement; and, upon the judgment so pronounced, a decree shall follow.

Agreement to state issue.—These rules deal with the stating by consent of a special issue in a suit, whilst O. XXXVI. deals with proceedings without suit on the agreement of the parties.(1) These rules provide for what may be called the adjustment or compromise of a suit, not absolutely, as does O. XXIII. r. 3, but contingently on the opinion of the Court on certain issues of fact or law submitted to it.(2) Upon the finding of that issue the adjustment or compromise becomes absolute, and when it does, the duty of the Court is to pronounce judgment.(3) The word "may" in the corresponding section to r. 7 meant "shall," and the Court was bound to give judgment according to the agreement, even though specific performance of it might ordinarily be refused.(4) In a case decided under the Code of 1859 the defendants filed a regular appeal. The respondent objected that no appeal would lie, as both parties had entered into an agreement in writing to abide by the determination of a single issue set forth in the agreement, and which had been decided against the appellant. It was held that the Lower Court's decision on an issue so determined by agreement, could not be contested in the appeal which was dismissed.(5) These rules deal with a question being referred to the finding of the Court. But where the question of fact was referred to the finding of a Commissioner, it was held that the principles laid down in these rules were applicable, and that the defendants were estopped

ORDER XV.

Disposal of the Suit at the first Hearing.

1. Where at the first hearing of a suit it appears that the parties are not at issue on any question of law or of fact, the Court may at once pronounce judgment. [s. 152.]

Parties not at issue.

Parties not at issue.—This rule corresponds with sect. 144 of the Code of 1859, and 152 of the last Code. If the defendants voluntarily appear in Court and confess judgment, no summons is necessary for their appearance, and the Court may at once give judgment for the plaintiffs.(1) When the plaintiff sues the right person, but serves the summons on another person of a similar name, who appears and denies liability, the suit should be dismissed with costs.(2)

2. Where there are more defendants than one, and any one of the defendants is not at issue with the plaintiff on any question of law or of fact, the Court may at once pronounce judgment for or against such defendant and the suit shall proceed only against the other defendants. [s. 153.]

One of several defendants not at issue.

One defendant not at issue.—In an action commenced against several joint debtors, judgment recovered against one of them who admits the claim does not bar the further prosecution of the suit against the others.(3)

3. (1) Where the parties are at issue on some question of law or of fact, and issues have been framed by the Court as hereinbefore provided, if the Court is satisfied that no further argument or evidence than the parties can at once adduce is required upon such of the issues as may be sufficient for the decision of the suit, and that no injustice will result from proceeding with the suit forthwith, the Court may proceed to determine such issues, and, if the finding thereon is sufficient for the decision, may pronounce judgment accordingly, whether the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only or for the final disposal of the suit: [s. 154.]

Parties at issue.

Provided that, where the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, the parties or their pleaders are present and none of them objects.

(2) London, Bombay and Mediterranean Bank v. Mahomed Ibrahim, 4 B. 619 (1880).

(3) Dick v. Dhunji, 25 B. 378 (1901).

(2) Where the finding is not sufficient for the decision, the Court shall postpone the further hearing of the suit, and shall fix a day for the production of such further evidence, or for such further argument as the case requires.

Determination of issue.—A Judge cannot dispose of a suit at the first hearing if a party appears and objects to the adoption of that procedure.(1) When a summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, a Judge should not proceed and try the cause unless under the circumstances laid down in this rule, for otherwise he might preclude a party from adducing evidence in support of his case; (2) but if the evidence adduced is decisive of the matter in dispute, then the Judge may dispose of the cause, unless either of the parties distinctly objects and asks for time to produce evidence in support of his case.(3)

In the under-mentioned case (4) the Privy Council observed: "Before entering upon the particular questions raised by this appeal, it may be right to observe, that the Courts in India, in disposing of the case, were bound to proceed as the High Court appears to have proceeded, upon the facts alleged by the plaint, and upon the assumption of the truth of those facts. When a plaintiff, on certain alleged facts, asks relief, and is unable to obtain a trial of the facts, and a hearing on the facts that he may establish, by reason of the conclusions of law which the Judge forms on the case in its then condition, justice requires that the Court should proceed upon the plaintiff's allegations. The case must be determined as if it had arisen on a demurrer to a pleading or to evidence where such procedure exists. Courts cannot be justified in refusing to allow cases to go to proof upon any other assumption than that the facts alleged are capable of proof, and are proved. This assumption of the truth of the facts alleged must, however, be limited to the consideration of the legal effect of the facts alleged upon the bars raised against the trial of those facts."

Failure to produce evidence.

4. Where the summons has been issued for the final disposal of the suit and either party fails without sufficient cause to produce the evidence on which he relies, the Court may at once pronounce judgment, or may, if it thinks fit, after framing and recording issues, adjourn the suit for the production of such evidence as may be necessary for its decision upon such issues.

Failure to produce evidence.—It was held under sect. 145 of the Code of 1859, which corresponds to this rule, that although a case may have been set down for final disposal, yet if it be a case in which further evidence is required, the Judge is bound to adjourn the case, unless he is satisfied that the plaintiff has, without sufficient cause, failed to produce his evidence.(5)

ORDER XVI.

Summoning and Attendance of Witnesses.

1. At any time after the suit is instituted, the parties may obtain, on application to the Court, or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf, summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents. [s. 159.]

Summons to attend to give evidence or produce documents.

Summons on witness.—Where the evidence of a witness or the production of a document is material to a party's case, it is his business to move the Court to take the necessary steps in the matter.(1) Application for summonses might under the last Code be made at any time before the day fixed for settlement or disposal as the case may be.(2) To these the party was entitled as of right,(3) unless the application was not a bonâ fide one but made with the desire of obstructing the course of Justice ; (4) the Court having an inherent power to prevent the abuse of its procedure.(5) Now the application may be made at any time after the suit is instituted. The circumstance that the application is made at a late stage is no ground for refusing it, though the Court may, when the case is heard, refuse to adjourn the hearing.(6)

Under the Code of 1859 the Court had very little, if any, discretion at all in the matter, and the present as well as the last Code show there is none except where there is abuse of procedure : see Rajendro Narain v. Rajah Kumud Narain, 3 C. L. R. 569; as regards exemption from giving evidence in Court, see s. 401.

(6) Kaji Ahmad v. Kaji Mahamad, 9 B. 308 (1884); Abdool Kadir v. Shaikh Abin Mirdha, 24 W. R. 290 (1875). Under the Code of 1859 the Court had a discretion to refuse summons if the application was made at a time which appeared to render it impossible that the witnesses should be brought : Rajendro Narain v. Rajah Kumad Narain, 3 C. L. R. 569 (1878); Indro Chunder v. Dunlop, 9 W. R. 530 (1868); but see Brojo Nath Mookhopadhya v. Pretap Chunder, 22 W. R. 296 (1874); and now the Court should issue summonses at the applicant's risk, and unless proper cause is shown refuse to adjourn the hearing if the witness is not in attendance : Bhagwat Das v. Debi Din, 16 A. 218 (1894).

Where the party had himself originally undertaken to bring the witnesses it was held that his failure to do so was no sufficient reason for depriving the party of his right to have subpœnas issued, although it might be a reason for not waiting for them if the plaintiff's case had been in other respects finished before they could be examined.(1) In fact the question whether a Court should issue a summons or should adjourn, are two entirely distinct matters.(2) The Court has, except in cases of manifest abuse of procedure, no discretion to refuse an application for summons. Even after issues have been fixed or the hearing has commenced, the Court must grant summonses if applied for, though it may inform the party applying that it does not intend to adjourn the hearing for the attendance of the witness. For it might happen that the hearing was not concluded before the witness appeared and that it would be right to hear the witness so summoned ; (3) and a Court cannot tell beforehand what means a party may have for facilitating the attendance of his witnesses.(4) If the Court wrongly refuses summons the High Court may interfere in revision.(5) If summons has been granted and the witness does not appear, the Court will proceed unless an application is made to adjourn. And it will not grant this unless good cause is shown. The Court has a discretion either to issue a second summons when the first fails, or to take stronger measures, as to which see O. XVI. rr. 10–12, 17, 18. It is, however, the business of the party to move the Court to do what is necessary for his case.(6) When, however, a witness has been summoned to give evidence in a case which is not reached, it is not necessary to issue a fresh summons to the witness. He need only be warned that his attendance will be required on the day to which the hearing of the case may be postponed.(7) The question of the issue of summons must also be distinguished from the question whether a party will be allowed to supplement his evidence after his case has been closed.(8)

Expenses of witness to be paid into Court on applying for summons.

2. (1) The party applying for a summons shall, before the summons is granted and within a period to be fixed, pay into Court such a sum of money as appears to the Court to be sufficient to defray the travelling and other expenses of the person summoned in passing to and from the Court in which he is required to attend, and for one day's attendance.

Experts.

Scale of expenses.

(3) Where the Court is subordinate to a High Court, regard shall be had, in fixing the scale of such expenses, to any rules made in that behalf.

Expenses of witnesses.—See sect. 151 of Act VIII. of 1859. Before a witness is summoned, a sufficient sum for his expenses in going to and from the Court and for one day's attendance must be deposited in Court.(1) It was in an early case (2) held that the sum fixed must have reference to the travelling expenses or other charges of a similar nature; and where a witness who had incurred no expense in travelling asked for compensation for loss of time the application was refused. A party need not pay any more into Court until it has fixed what is reasonable.(3) Once sworn, a witness must give his evidence even though his expenses have not been paid. But he does not cease on that account to be under the protection of the Court, and he is entitled to be paid his expenses though he has not applied for them before giving his evidence.(4) The provisions relating to the payment of witnesses no doubt contemplate that the expenses should be paid by the party who asks the Court to summon the witness before he gives his evidence, but they do not declare that unless this is done the Court has no power to require their payment. They are intended for the benefit of the person summoned, and there is nothing in them to protect the party who asks the Court to issue a summons from his liability to pay the expenses of the witness if the Court per incuriam, or in order to save delay, issues the summons without seeing that the party applying for it discharges the duty imposed on him by law. If he partially fails in such duty, and deposits some part, but not the whole of the expenses, the Court may require him to pay a further sum, and may levy the amount summarily from him. There is no reason why the party should be in a better position when he fails to deposit any part of the expenses, or if the witness has given his evidence than if he has not done so.(5) A Court while bound to fix a reasonable amount to defray the expenses of a witness may allow only travelling expenses and charges of a similar nature not including compensation for loss of time. It may be a question whether this is in all cases sufficient. The case of expert witnesses is, however, recognized as exceptional, and the section has been amended to allow of a fee to such a witness.

Tender of expenses to witness.

3. The sum so paid into Court shall be tendered to the person summoned, at the time of serving the summons, if it can be served personally.

Tender of expenses to witness.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 151. After the list of witnesses have been filed and cost of service, etc., deposited, the Court's officers, and not the party, are responsible for the service and return of process.(1)

Procedure where insufficient sum paid in.

4. (1) Where it appears to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf that the sum paid into Court is not sufficient to cover such expenses or reasonable remuneration, the Court may direct such further sum to be paid to the person summoned as appears to be necessary on that account, and, in case of default in payment, may order such sum to be levied by attachment and sale of the moveable property of the party obtaining the summons; or the Court may discharge the person summoned without requiring him to give evidence; or may both order such levy and discharge such person as aforesaid.

Expenses of witnesses detained more than one day.

(2) Where it is necessary to detain the person summoned for a longer period than one day, the Court may, from time to time, order the party at whose instance he was summoned to pay into Court such sum as is sufficient to defray the expenses of his detention for such further period, and, in default of such deposit being made, may order such sum to be levied by attachment and sale of the moveable property of such party; or the Court may discharge the person summoned without requiring him to give evidence; or may both order such levy and discharge such person as aforesaid.

Levy and discharge.—Under the present section the Court can both order a levy and discharge. Under sect. 157 of the Code of 1859, the powers given were alternative.(2)

Time, place and purpose of attendance to be specified in summons.

5. Every summons for the attendance of a person to give evidence or to produce a document shall specify the time and place at which he is required to attend, and also whether his attendance is required for the purpose of giving evidence or to produce a document, or for both purposes; and any particular document, which the person summoned is called on to produce, shall be described in the summons with reasonable accuracy.

Summons to give evidence.—Sect. 152, Act VIII. of 1859. A written summons distinctly describing the nature of the document required must be issued on a party required to produce it; a verbal order to his pleader is not such a summons as is contemplated by law, and is not sufficient.(1)

Summons to produce document.

6. Any person may be summoned to produce a document, without being summoned to give evidence; and any person summoned merely to produce a document shall be deemed to have complied with the summons if he causes such document to be produced instead of attending personally to produce the same. [s. 164.]

Power to require persons present in Court to give evidence or produce document.

7. Any person present in Court may be required by the Court to give evidence or to produce any document then and there in his possession or power. [s. 165.]

Summons how served.

8. Every summons under this Order shall be served as nearly as may be in the same manner as a summons to a defendant, and the rules in Order V. as to proof of service shall apply in the case of all summonses served under this rule. [s. 166.]

Summons, how served.—Act VIII. of 1859, sects. 154–157. The Code of 1859 contained separate sections dealing with service of summons on a witness. The rules of service both in the last as under the present Code are assimilated to those referring to service on defendants, as to which see rules dealing with same.

Time for serving summons.

9. Service shall in all cases be made a sufficient time before the time specified in the summons for the attendance of the person summoned, to allow him a reasonable time for preparation and for travelling to the place at which his attendance is required. [s. 167.]

Time for service.—The provision in this rule is one in favour of the witness, and for enforcing diligence on the party; it does not give to the Courts any discretion as to granting or enforcing summonses in consideration of their being applied for at a late period. If, however, there has been delay, the Court may refuse to adjourn the case for the attendance of the witnesses.(2)

Procedure where witness fails to comply with summons.

10. (1) Where a person to whom a summons has been issued either to attend to give evidence or to produce a document fails to attend or to produce the document in compliance with such summons, the Court shall, if the certificate of the serving-officer has not been verified by affidavit, and may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving-officer on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching the service or non-service of the summons.

(2) Where the Court sees reason to believe that such evidence or production is material, and that such person has, without lawful excuse, failed to attend or to produce the document in compliance with such summons or has intentionally avoided service, it may issue a proclamation requiring him to attend to give evidence or to produce the document at a time and place to be named therein; and a copy of such proclamation shall be affixed on the outer door or other conspicuous part of the house in which he ordinarily resides.

(3) In lieu of or at the time of issuing such proclamation, or at any time afterwards, the Court may, in its discretion, issue a warrant, either with or without bail, for the arrest of such person, and may make an order for the attachment of his property to such amount as it thinks fit, not exceeding the amount of the costs of attachment and of any fine which may be imposed under rule 12:

Provided that no Court of Small Causes shall make an order for the attachment of immoveable property.

Absconding witness.—This section corresponds with sect. 159 of Code of 1859. The words in first paragraph, "shall . . . by another Court," were inserted in this section in the last Code by sect. 16, Act VII. of 1888. The present section has been reconstructed and the penultimate paragraph omitted.

If the return of service has not been verified, the Court must examine the serving-officer on oath. In other cases it has a discretion. See notes to r. 12. Before issuing a proclamation, the Judge must satisfy himself whether the evidence of the witness is material, and that there is no excuse for non-attendance, or that he is keeping out of the way. Both these conditions must be fulfilled, and then the Court can act under this section and let the case stand over.(1) When the return of service is made on the day of trial, the party is entitled to some time to prove that the evidence is material, and that the witness is keeping away.(2)

(2) Prem Chand Roy v. Becharam, 6 W. R. 126 (1866).

Inasmuch as the Judge is given a discretion, he is not bound to act on an application, but the discretion must be exercised in a reasonable manner.(1) Where the conditions mentioned exist the Judge should not refuse an application unless it appears that the applicant is not entitled to the assistance of the Court either by reason of having aided in or connived at the absconding of the witness, or of having otherwise placed himself in such a position that it would be inequitable to grant it.(2) If the Court refuses to issue process, it is advisable that it should tell its reasons for such refusal.(3) It is for the party to produce his evidence, or, at all events, to exhaust all the means that the law gives him for its production. He should, therefore, it was held, on the expiry of the proclamation, apply for attachment. If he does not, but goes to trial upon the evidence which he has succeeded in getting, the Court must decide the case upon the evidence before it.(4) The third clause is new, and gives the Court power to issue a warrant with bail instead of compelling a witness, as was formerly the case, to submit to the humiliation of production in custody before he could obtain an order for his release.

If witness appears, attachment may be withdrawn.

11. Where, at any time after the attachment of his property, such person appears and satisfies the Court,— [s. 169.]

(a) that he did not, without lawful excuse, fail to comply with the summons or intentionally avoid service, and,

(b) where he has failed to attend at the time and place named in a proclamation issued under the last preceding rule, that he had no notice of such proclamation in time to attend, the Court shall direct that the property be released from attachment, and shall make such order as to the costs of the attachment as it thinks fit.

Procedure if witness fails to appear.

12. The Court may, where such person does not appear, or appears but fails so to satisfy the Court, impose upon him such fine not exceeding five hundred rupees as it thinks fit, having regard to his condition in life and all the circumstances of the case, and may order his property, or any part thereof, to be attached and sold or, if already attached under rule 10, to be sold for the purpose of satisfying all costs of such attachment, together with the amount of the said fine, if any: [s. 170.]

pays into Court the costs and fine aforesaid, the Court shall order the property to be released from attachment.

Nazir's Report.—The Nazir's report of service of summons, or issue of proclamation, is sufficient to admit of the Court taking steps to enforce the attendance of a witness, but when the Court proceeds to impose the penalty, the serving-officers should ordinarily be examined and cross-examined on oath.(1)

Sales.—Such sales require confirmation by the Court.(2)

Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order releasing property from an attachment under this proviso.(3)

Mode of attachment.

13. The provisions with regard to the attachment and sale of property in the execution of a decree shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to any attachment and sale under this Order as if the person whose property is so attached were a judgment-debtor.

Court may of its own accord summon as witnesses strangers to suit.

14. Subject to the provisions of this Code as to attendance and appearance and to any law for the time being in force, where the Court at any time thinks it necessary to examine any person other than a party to the suit and not called as a witness by a party to the suit, the Court may, of its own motion, cause such person to be summoned as a witness to give evidence, or to produce any document in his possession, on a day to be appointed, and may examine him as a witness or require him to produce such document.

Duty of persons summoned to give evidence or produce document.

15. Subject as last aforesaid, whoever is summoned to appear and give evidence in a suit shall attend at the time and place named in the summons for that purpose, and whoever is summoned to produce a document shall either attend to produce it, or cause it to be produced, at such time and place.

Departure of witnesses.—This section in the last Code got rid (1) of a difficulty felt in an early case,(2) in which it was held that when a case was adjourned for further hearing before the witnesses had been examined, the Court could not bind them down to attend again. The provision is now still further simplified, and power is given to enforce attendance by taking a recognizance. As to the recall of a witness, see O. XVIII. r. 17.

witnesses do not appear.(1) This rule is of a penal character, and its provisions must be strictly complied with.(2) Due service of summons is the foundation for an order under this rule; and, therefore, if the summons has not been duly served, the power under this rule is not exerciseable.(3) The rule contemplates the case of a person who has been served, and, failing to attend, has been arrested and brought before the Court; it does not apply to the case of a person who attends and says he has not the document required.(4) The Court must, on an application, satisfy itself of due service and failure to attend or departure. It is, however, not necessary to institute a formal investigation and come to a determination on the evidence adduced. If service is proved, and the proof leads the Judge to believe that the summons had come to the knowledge of the witness, and he sees no reason to doubt that the witness can give material evidence, and there is no one in attendance who can account for the absence of the witness, a warrant may issue.(5) What is lawful excuse must depend upon the circumstances of each case, but there is no obligation to issue a warrant when absence is due to non-payment or non-tender of the necessary expenses.(6) The Court must, in all cases, pass some order on an application; (7) and should grant it where the witness is material, and there is no reason to believe that the applicant is responsible for his non-appearance, or has otherwise placed himself in such a position that it would be inequitable to grant his application.(8) And if a case falls within the rule, the applicant having done all that lay upon him to secure the attendance of the witness, the attendance should be enforced, and the applicant should not be required to take out fresh summonses.(9) The opinion of the Judge that the witnesses are not likely to benefit a party's case,(10) or his belief that he could inflict no punishment under the penal Code,(11) affords no valid reason for refusing the application. A witness who has failed to appear on his summons can only be fined after he has been arrested and brought before the Court.(12)

Rules as to witnesses to apply to parties summoned.

Parties.—The preceding rules deal with witnesses who are not parties. A party may appear by pleader or in person. In the former case if the pleader refuses or is unable to answer any material question, the Court may direct the absent party to attend under O. X. r. 4, and on his failure to do so may pronounce judgment against him. If a party, whether appearing by pleader or in person, who is present in Court refuses without lawful excuse to carry out an order under r. 20 the penalty is that stated therein. Under sect. 170 of the Code of 1859, a party who being summoned to give evidence or to produce a document, failed without lawful excuse to comply with the order, was also liable to have judgment passed against him. But this section has not been re-enacted, and by sect. 178 of the last Code and r. 21 of this Code a party is to be dealt with in such a case on the same footing as any person summoned as a witness. The liability, therefore, to judgment in case of default is limited to the specific instances mentioned in O. X. rr. 4 and 20, supra. Contempt of Court may be punished by fine and imprisonment.(1) This rule gives a further power which is one to be used with forbearance and is to be enforced generally in cases of contumacious refusal.(2) What is or is not lawful excuse must depend upon the circumstances of each case. The decision in one case can scarcely be a guide in another, unless the facts are precisely the same.(3) R. 20 applies to Probate cases, but it will not justify the Judge in dispensing with proof of the execution of a will.(4) It has

ORDER XVII.

Adjournments.

1. (1) The Court may, if sufficient cause is shown, at any stage of the suit grant time to the parties or to any of them, and may from time to time adjourn the hearing of the suit. [s. 156.]

Court may grant time and adjourn hearing.

(2) In every such case the Court shall fix a day for the further hearing of the suit, and may make such order as it thinks fit with respect to the costs occasioned by the adjournment:

Costs of adjournment.

Provided that, when the hearing of evidence has once begun, the hearing of the suit shall be continued from day to day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, unless the Court finds the adjournment of the hearing beyond the following day to be necessary for reasons to be recorded.

"Grant time."—That is at the instance of the parties. It has been held that the sections in the last Code which correspond with this and the next rule did not apply to an adjournment which is not made at the instance of the parties, but which is necessitated by the rules of Court which regulates the disposition of its own business.(1)

"Sufficient cause."—This must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case, and precedents (2) are not generally of use. The Court, however, should act reasonably and with indulgence towards litigants where there is no ground for imputing a deliberate intention to delay. A party has a legal right to ask the assistance of the Court in obtaining summons to, or a commission for the examination of, a witness. But if he has delayed so long that he fails to get the process executed in sufficient time, he, of course, must take the consequences of his delay. The Court will not adjourn the case to remedy his neglect.(3) Costs.—This rule gives the Court ample discretion as to the particular directions to be given in the matter of costs occasioned by the adjournment.

(3) Hari Dass v. Meer Moazam, 15 W. R. 447 (1871).

Sufficient opportunity should be given to the party obtaining the adjournment to enable him to carry out the order of the Court and produce his evidence.(1)

Review: Appeal.—Once an order for adjournment has been made it should not be rescinded on review unless on good and sufficient cause shown and in the presence of the other party.(2) Orders under this rule are not open to appeal.(3) Their propriety can be questioned in an appeal from the final decree. An Appellate Court, however, is not generally inclined to interfere with inferior Courts, in the exercise of the discretion allowed to them to grant or refuse an adjournment.(4) An order made by a Judge of the High Court at settlement of issues fixing a distant date for the hearing of a suit is not an order under this rule and is appealable under the Letters Patent.(5)

Procedure if parties fail to appear on day fixed.

2. Where, on any day to which the hearing of the suit is adjourned, the parties or any of them fail to appear, the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by Order IX. or make such other order as it thinks fit.

Applicability.—This rule is an application to adjourned hearings of the procedure prescribed for the first hearing. The distinction between this rule and the next is that where there is a default in the appearance of the parties and their pleaders on the date fixed for the adjourned trial of the suit, a decree may be passed under this rule, and subsequently the case may be revived under O. IX. r. 9; but where time has been given to one of the parties to do an act and he fails, the order is passed under the next rule, and the matter cannot be revived but is only subject to review of judgment or to appeal.(6) This rule, which speaks of the disposal of the suit, includes cases in which there may not be any materials before the Court to enable it to pronounce a decision on the merits. The next rule contemplates a case in which the Court has materials before it to enable it to proceed to a decision of the suit. The contingency, however, contemplated in this rule may happen in a case which falls within the letter of the next rule. In such a case, if there are no materials on the record, the appropriate procedure to follow would be that laid down in this rule, whereas if there are materials the Court should proceed under the next rule.(7) The effect of this rule is to make O. IX. r. 8 applicable to adjourned hearings of cases.(8) See notes to that rule.

(8) Ib., at p. 237.

"Any day."—That is the specific day to which the suit is adjourned. The rule does not apply unless a day has been fixed for hearing under the last rule.(1) It is illegal to decide a case in the absence of any party without fixing a day for the hearing of the case, if the hearing had not taken place on the day originally fixed.(2)

"Dispose."—This term in this rule refers not only to the disposal of the suit ex parte, but also to the final disposal of it, and includes therefore not only the procedure up to the passing of the decree, but also the procedure for setting aside that decree when made. A Court, therefore, which has rightly dismissed a suit on an adjourned hearing by virtue of the provisions of this rule and O. IX. r. 8, may also restore it under r. 9 of that Order.(3)

"Other order."—The Court is not bound to proceed under the rules mentioned.(4)

Appeal.—It was held that an order dismissing a suit at an adjourned hearing for non-appearance of the plaintiff and his pleader was an order under sect. 157 of the last Code, and its consequential sect. 102 and not 158, and a refusal to consider an application under sect. 103 of that Code was appealable.(5) No appeal was held to lie from an order under the section corresponding with this rule read with sect. 108 of the last Code, setting aside a decree passed ex parte in default of appearance of the defendant on the day to which the hearing of the suit had been adjourned. Under O. XLIII. an appeal is given in the case of orders under rr. 9 and 13.(6)

Court may proceed notwithstanding either party fails to produce evidence, etc.

3. Where any party to a suit to whom time has been granted fails to produce his evidence, or to cause the attendance of his witnesses, or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit, for which time has been allowed, the Court may, notwithstanding such default, proceed to decide the suit forthwith. [s. 158.

Applicability.—This rule applies to a party to whom time has been given to do some act and who makes default.(7) As to the distinction between it and the last rule, see notes to that rule and post. It was held under the last Code that the former section did not apply to proceedings in execution.(1)

"Any party."—The rule does not refer to adjournments by the Court at its own motion; (2) and appears to apply, to a case where any one party and not both has had a case adjourned.(3) Where, after issues had been settled the hearing was adjourned to a fixed date for final disposal, and on that date plaintiff did not appear, on which the suit was dismissed, it was held that the former section did not apply, as it had been adjourned in the ordinary way and not in favour of either party for the purposes mentioned.(4)

"To whom time."—A date must be fixed within which the act must be done. The stringent provisions of the rule cannot be put in force unless the party has had distinct notice in respect of time, of what is required of him, and default in the matter of time is of the essence of the particular kind of default contemplated.(5)

"Fails."—It must be shown that a specific order has been disobeyed, either as regards time (vide ante) or otherwise. So as costs are ordinarily recoverable in execution there is no default to obey an order as to costs in the absence of a specific direction, making the payment of costs a condition precedent to the hearing of the evidence of the party in default.(6) Where the Court refused to grant plaintiff's application to be allowed to examine a defendant as a witness on her behalf, and on the adjourned date of hearing the plaintiff failed to produce any other witness, it was held that as plaintiff's application should not have been refused she had not committed default.(7)

"Any other act."—The rule, while mentioning the production of evidence and the attendance of witnesses,(8) says any other act; provided that that act is necessary to the further progress of the suit, such as the payment of costs for the issue of a commission; (9) but not where the plaintiff fails to make up a deficiency in respect of stamp, such matter having been provided for by sect. 54, now O. VII. r. 11, ante.(10)

"To decide the suit."—Default does not lead to the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit, or the decreeing of the claim against the defendant if the plaintiff or defendant make default respectively; (11) nor is an order striking the case off the file regular.(1) The words "notwithstanding such default" clearly imply that the Court is to proceed with the disposal of the suit, in spite of the default upon such materials as are before it. If in the case of a plaintiff such materials fail to substantiate the claim the suit will be dismissed for this reason and not for the default. If default be by the defendant the suit cannot be decreed without taking any evidence or without reference to the evidence which has already been adduced. In both cases the decree is on the merits.(2) The effect of a decision, provided that the case comes within the terms of the rule,(3) is to bar a second suit.(4) Under the Code of 1859 the Court was bound to decide the suit "on the record." The effect of these latter words was that though the Appellate Court could remand a case for decision the Lower Court could not admit any evidence after the remand, but was bound to decide it on the record as it stood when the case was remanded.(5) These words were omitted in the former Code. Where a suit is dismissed under this rule on the merits, the plaintiff's remedy is by way of appeal.(6)

ORDER XVIII.

Hearing of the Suit and Examination of Witnesses.

Right to begin.

1. The plaintiff has the right to begin unless the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff and contends that either in point of law or on some additional facts alleged by the defendant the plaintiff is not entitled to any part of the relief which he seeks, in which case the defendant has the right to begin.

"Right to begin."—This rule is taken from the Explanation to sect. 179 of the last Code, the remainder of the section being incorporated in the next rule. The party on whom the onus probandi lies as developed by the record must begin. As to this, see the Authors' Evidence Act, 5th ed., pp. 629–705. At the hearing of a case on a preliminary issue the defendant by whom the issue is raised has the right to begin ; (1) and if in appeal the respondent objects that no appeal lies the appellant begins.(2)

Statement and production of evidence.

2. (1) On the day fixed for the hearing of the suit or on any other day to which the hearing is adjourned, the party having the right to begin shall state his case and produce his evidence in support of the issues which he is bound to prove.

(2) The other party shall then state his case and produce his evidence (if any) and may then address the Court generally on the whole case.

(3) The party beginning may then reply generally on the whole case.

Evidence where several issues.

3. Where there are several issues, the burden of proving some of which lies on the other party, the party beginning may, at his option, either produce his evidence on those issues or reserve it by way of answer to the evidence produced by the other party ; and, in the latter case, the party beginning may produce evidence on those issues after the other party has produced all his evidence, and the other party may then reply specially on the evidence so produced by the party beginning; but the party beginning will then be entitled to reply generally on the whole case.

Statement and production of evidence.—The first paragraph of r. 2 is the first paragraph of sect. 179 of the last Code. The third rule is taken from sect. 180. The plaintiff and such of the defendants as support the plaintiff's case, wholly or in part, must address the Court and call their evidence first, and the other party (namely the persons opposed to the plaintiff's case and that of the defendants supporting it) must address the Court and call their evidence.(1)

Witnesses to be examined in open Court.

4. The evidence of the witnesses in attendance shall be taken orally in open Court in the presence and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge. [s. 181.]

Witnesses.—The parties must select their witnesses, summon them, and if they do not attend, move the Court to secure their attendance, and when a Commission has been issued the Court must be moved to wait for the return. It is not the business of the Court to determine what witnesses shall be examined. They should then call upon the Court to examine such of them as may be offered for examination.(2) It is the duty of the Court to examine every witness tendered, though he has not been summoned or his name has not been enlisted in the list; (3) unless it is clear that the intention of the party producing the witness is to delay or obstruct justice.(4) He should not select a certain number only for examination; (5) nor send some away because he had examined as many on one side as on the other; (6) or because he thinks their evidence will probably not be of much value,(7) or because they would only prove the same facts as already deposed to.(8) It is in the discretion of the Court of first instance to allow a party to call further evidence after he has closed his case.(9) A plaintiff who does not care to be present to support his own case when he knows it is tried, cannot of course be allowed to urge the plea that he had no opportunity of rebutting the defendant's evidence.(1) New matter discovered after the plaintiff's case is closed ought not to be admitted unless it is such as would probably occasion a different determination.(2) It was ruled that when a witness had been examined on behalf of the plaintiff he cannot be recalled as a witness for the defendant without leave obtained at the end of the first examination.(3) As regards the examination of purdanashin women, see sect. 132. There should be cogent reasons to necessitate the Court to order principals to leave the court-room while the evidence of witnesses is being recorded. But the other witnesses should not be present.(4) Where the first Court did not consider it necessary to examine further witnesses whom the plaintiff adduced, it was held that the Appellate Court, if not satisfied with that evidence, should have given the party an opportunity of examining their other witnesses.(5) The Court should, however, be satisfied that the witnesses were present, and that a bonâ fide application for their examination was made.(6) In second appeal the Court has refused to interfere when the point was not taken in the first Appellate Court.(7) It ought to be shown that the evidence would have been material to the case.(8)

How evidence shall be taken in appealable cases.

5. In cases in which an appeal is allowed the evidence of each witness shall be taken down in writing, in the language of the Court, by or in the presence and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge, not ordinarily in the form of question and answer, but in that of a narrative, and, when completed, shall be read over in the presence of the Judge and of the witness, and the Judge shall, if necessary, correct the same, and shall sign it.

Taking of evidence in appealable cases.—This rule corresponds to part of sect. 172, Act VII. of 1859, and sect. 103 of the last Code. Under the last-mentioned section, as under the present rule, the evidence had and has to be read in the presence of the parties and their pleaders and no provision is made for signature by the witness. The deposition is to be read over in the presence of the Judge and the witness. Evidence which has been received in the absence of the opposite party, will be rejected if objected to.(1) Failure to comply with the provisions of this and the next rule will render the deposition inadmissible on a charge of giving false evidence based on such deposition; and under sect. 91 of the Evidence Act no other evidence is admissible.(2) In second appeal the case will be remanded to have the evidence properly recorded, provided that the objection has been taken in a regular appeal.(3) Corrections in depositions should be attested by the initials of the officers making them.(4) The rule does not apply to High Courts or Punjab Chief Courts in their Civil jurisdiction.(5) As to Oudh, see Act XVIII. of 1876, sect. 19; Central Provinces, sect. 2, Act II. of 1879; Burmah Law or Burmah Courts' Act. It was held to apply to cases under Act X. of 1870 (6) (Land Acquisition).

When deposition to be interpreted.

6. Where the evidence is taken down in a language different from that in which it is given, and the witness does not understand the language in which it is taken down, the evidence as taken down in writing shall be interpreted to him in the language in which it is given. [s. 188.]

Interpretation of deposition.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 171, clause 3. This rule does not apply to High Courts, or the Punjab Chief Court in the exercise of their original Civil jurisdiction. See note to last rule. As to Oudh, see Act XVIII. of 1876, sect. 19.

Evidence under section 138.

7. Evidence taken down under section 138 shall be in the form prescribed by rule 5 and shall be read over and signed and, as occasion may require, interpreted and corrected as if it were evidence taken down under that rule. [s. 185A, para. (3).]

Memorandum when evidence not taken down by Judge.

of their original Civil jurisdiction. See note to r. 5. It is not in force in the Central Provinces (Act II. of 1879). As to Oudh, see Act XVIII. of 1876, sect. 19. A separate memorandum on each witness should be recorded at the time of the examination in the vernacular of the Judge, and it should contain every material answer made by the witness in the examination-in-chief, the cross-examination, and in reply to questions put by the Court in the form of a narrative.(1) The vernacular record and not the memorandum is looked upon as the deposition of the witness, and where there is any discrepancy, the vernacular record must be followed.(2)

When evidence may be taken in English.

9. Where English is not the language of the Court, but all the parties to the suit who appear in person, and the pleaders of such as appear by pleaders, do not object to have such evidence as is given in English taken down in English, the Judge may so take it down.

Evidence in English.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 172, sentence 4. This rule does not apply to High Courts or the Punjab Chief Court in the exercise of their original Civil jurisdiction. See note to r. 5. The former section was not in force in the Central Provinces, Act II. of 1879; sect. 2, modified in Oudh, Act XVIII. of 1876, sect. 19.

Any particular question and answer may be taken down.

10. The Court may, of its own motion or on the application of any party or his pleader, take down any particular question and answer, or any objection to any question, if there appears to be any special reason for so doing.

Taking down of question, answer, and objection.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 172, sentence 5, and sect. 186 of the last Code, which applied to High Courts, and was in force in a modified form in Oudh (Act XVIII. of 1876, sect. 19). This is excepted by O. XLIX. r. 3, post. The words "or cause to be taken down" have been omitted.

Questions objected to and allowed by Court.

11. Where any question put to a witness is objected to by a party or his pleader, and the Court allows the same to be put, the Judge shall take down the question, the answer, the objection and the name of the person making it, together with the decision of the Court thereon.

Remarks on demeanour of witnesses.

Demeanour of witness.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 172, sentence 7, and sect. 188 of the last Code which applied to High Courts, but not to P.S.C.C., and was modified in Oudh, Act XVIII. of 1876, sect. 19; sect. 3, ante. This rule is not excepted in O. XLIX. r. 3, post.

13. In cases in which an appeal is not allowed, it shall not be necessary to take down the evidence of the witnesses in writing at length; but the Judge, as the examination of each witness proceeds, shall make a memorandum of the substance of what he deposes, and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Judge and shall form part of the record. [s. 189.]

Memorandum of evidence in unappealable cases.

Evidence in appealable cases.—This rule does not apply to High Courts or the Punjab Chief Court in the exercise of their original Civil jurisdiction. See O. XLIX. r. 3, and note to r. 5. It is not in force in the Central Provinces: see Act II. of 1879, sect. 19 and sect. 3, ante. The rule is also applicable to suits for the recovery of rent in Bengal whether an appeal is allowed or not (sect. 148 (f), Act VIII. of 1885). For power to direct that evidence in suits between landlord and tenant in agricultural villages in Ajmere and Merwara be taken in the form prescribed by the rule, see the Ajmere Courts Regulation (I. of 1877), sect. 29. In Bengal there is no fixed practice, but, as a rule, the memorandum is written legibly in the vernacular of the Judge, or in English, if he is sufficiently acquainted with that language, and signed by the Judge and dated.(1) A Judge of a Small Cause Court is bound to take down in the language of the witness the substance of what each deposes.(2)

14. (1) Where the Judge is unable to make a memorandum as required by this Order, he shall cause the reason of such inability to be recorded, and shall cause the memorandum to be made in writing from his dictation in open Court. [s. 190.]

Judge unable to make such memorandum to record reasons of his inability.

(2) Every memorandum so made shall form part of the record.

Inability to make memorandum.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 172, sentence 9. This rule applies to all rent suits in Bengal (Act VIII. of 1885, sect. 143 (2)); but not to the Chartered High Courts or the Punjab Chief Court, in the exercise of their original Civil jurisdiction (O. XLIX. r. 3, and Act XVIII. of 1884, sect. 16 (2)): modified in Oudh (Act XVIII. of 1876, sect. 19), and in the Central Provinces (Act II. of 1879, sect. 2). This section in the last Code, it was said, seemed to contemplate some personal inability. Press of business should not, unless under exceptional circumstances, be accepted as a Power to deal with evidence taken before another Judge.

15. (1) Where a Judge is prevented by death, transfer or other cause from concluding the trial of a suit, his successor may deal with any evidence or memorandum taken down or made under the foregoing rules as if such evidence or memorandum had been taken down or made by him or under his direction under the said rules and may proceed with the suit from the stage at which his predecessor left it.

(2) The provisions of sub-rule (1) shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to evidence taken in a suit transferred under section 24.

Evidence taken down by other Judges.—This is sect. 191 of the last Code remodelled. This proviso has been omitted. As to this, see sect. 24, sub-sect. 2, ante. Where evidence has been taken in another Court and on another trial, the Judge cannot rely on it, but is bound himself to record the evidence which is to be the material for his decision.(2) But the parties may agree to treat the former record as incorporate in the latter,(3) and where such an agreement has been entered into the witnesses should not be re-examined without some good reason being adduced.(4) A fortiori where evidence had been taken in the same case by the predecessor of the Judge the parties may waive the retaking of evidence.(5) Sect. 191 of the last Code, with which this rule corresponds, was substituted for the former section by Act VII. of 1888, with reference to the decisions noted.(6) Exception is made to the general rule where the Judge has died,(7) or been transferred, or is prevented by other cause from concluding the trial of the suit, or the suit itself has been transferred.(8) As to High Courts, see O. XLIX. r. 3.

evidence should be taken immediately, the Court may, upon the application of any party or of the witness, at any time after the institution of the suit, take the evidence of such witness in manner hereinbefore provided.

(2) Where such evidence is not taken forthwith and in the presence of the parties, such notice as the Court thinks sufficient, of the day fixed for the examination, shall be given to the parties.

(3) The evidence so taken shall be read over to the witness, and, if he admits it to be correct, shall be signed by him, and the Judge shall, if necessary, correct the same, and shall sign it, and it may then be read at any hearing of the suit.

Power to examine witnesses immediately.—This rule, which deals with what is called examination de bene esse, corresponds with sect. 173, Act VIII. of 1859. It does not apply (so far as relates to the manner of taking evidence) to the Chartered High Courts, or the Punjab Chief Court in the exercise of their Original Civil Jurisdiction. See O. XLIX. r. 3 and Act XVIII. of 1884, sect. 16 (1). The necessity for the signature of the Judge is a new provision. An examination under this rule being on the same footing as the examination of a witness in a cause, must be conducted by counsel.(1) and before the Court; not before a Commissioner unless by consent.(2) Where a Subordinate Judge, after reserving judgment, examined without notice to the parties or their pleaders a judgment-debtor who offered evidence concerning a point in dispute, it was held that this was not justified by sect. 165 of the Evidence Act and was a material irregularity.(3)

ORDER XIX.

Affidavits.

Power to order any point to be proved by affidavit.

1. Any Court may at any time for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit, or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing, on such conditions as the Court thinks reasonable:

Provided that where it appears to the Court that either party bonâ fide desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, and that such witness can be produced, an order shall not be made authorizing the evidence of such witness to be given by affidavit.

Affidavits at the final hearing.—Ordinarily witnesses at the trial of any action are examined vivâ voce and in open Court. This rule, which is taken from English O. 37, r. 1, permits the Court to allow particular facts to be proved by affidavit subject to the proviso. Affidavits cannot in this case be used without an order of Court, nor at all if the opposite party desires the production of the witness for cross-examination.(1) It is common practice to admit affidavits at the hearing when there is no contention as to the facts, which, however, have to be proved and cannot be admitted as against minor parties to the suit. The words "of first instance and any Appellate Court" after the words "any Court" have been omitted as doubtless redundant.

Power to order attendance of deponent for cross-examination.

2. (1) Upon any application evidence may be given by affidavit, but the Court may, at the instance of either party, order the attendance for cross-examination of the deponent.

(2) Such attendance shall be in Court, unless the deponent is exempted from personal appearance in Court, or the Court otherwise directs.

Affidavits in interlocutory proceedings.—This rule is taken from O. 38, r. 1. The practice here is the reverse of that which takes place at the hearing, affidavits being the rule and attendance for vivâ voce cross-examination the exception. There is no obligation on the Court to make an order for cross-examination upon an affidavit filed in a motion.(2) As a rule in interlocutory proceedings, cross-examination is not allowed because it would defeat the whole object of such proceedings, namely, despatch. The party moving has, however, a right to file affidavits in reply. Ordinarily these affidavits are confined to rebutting the allegations of the opposite party and should not bring forward further direct proof of the applicant's case which should have been given in the original affidavits upon which the application is made. As to persons exempted, see sects. 133, 135, ante.

3. (1) Affidavits shall be confined to such facts as the [s. 196.]

deponent is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory applications, on which statements of his belief may be admitted: provided that the grounds thereof are stated.

(2) The costs of every affidavit which shall unnecessarily set forth matters of hearsay or argumentative matter, or copies of or extracts from documents, shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be paid by the party filing the same.

Form and contents of affidavits.—The affidavit consists firstly of the "title." Every affidavit should be constituted in the cause or matter in which it is sworn, giving the style of the Court, the matter or suit in which it is made and the names of the parties as given in the proceedings. Then follow the name and place of abode of the deponents, and after this the matter of the affidavit. This rule states what this should be.(1) Evidence on information and belief, though generally admissible on interlocutory application as a matter of necessity, is not, it has been held, admissible in a proceeding which, though interlocutory in form, finally decides the rights of the parties.(2) But it is necessary that the grounds for this belief should be shown.(3) Though in practice this is frequently not done, nevertheless a party against whom such an affidavit is made is entitled to take the objection, and if it be one of substance the Court is bound to pay regard to it.(4) And the English Court of Appeal has commented strongly on the irregularity of an affidavit founded upon information and belief merely without giving the source of such information and belief.(5) The final part is the "jurat," which states that the deponent or deponents was, or were, sworn and the day of the month on which the affidavit was made, and should describe the person before whom it was sworn and show that such person was authorized to administer the oath of the declarant. As to who are such persons, see sect. 139.

ORDER XX.

Judgment and Decree.

Judgment when pronounced.

1. The Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment in open Court, either at once or on some future day, of which due notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders.

Judgment.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 183. It does not apply to High Courts (1) in their original jurisdictions. As to the taking of evidence, see Order XVIII. The meaning of the rule is (2) that judgment must be given upon evidence duly recorded before the Judge himself, except where the Code allows of such evidence being taken before another Judge or person, as in the case of O. XVIII. rr. 15, 16, or commissions under Order XXVI. As to the meaning of the term "judgment," see notes to sect. 2, ante. There is no objection to a Judge at the close of the hearing stating at once orally the judgment which he intends to record and deliver, but he must afterwards pronounce his written judgment in open Court.(3) It was held that the pronouncing of judgment out of Court—though an irregularity—was not a good ground of appeal.(4) At the same time a failure to observe the provisions of the section in this respect has been strongly disapproved of; for apart from its being contrary to law the omission to pronounce judgment in open Court is highly inconvenient, and deprives the Court and litigants of a valuable safeguard against error. Pleaders should attend when judgment is pronounced and assist the Court by pointing out any error that may occur.(5)

Power to pronounce judgment written by Judge's predecessor.

2. A Judge may pronounce a judgment written but not pronounced by his predecessor.

(5) Bai Dahi v. Hargovandas, 30 B. 455 (1906).

Predecessor's Judgment.—This rule adopts the decision in Parbutty v. Higgin,(1) which distinguished Mutty Lull Sen v. Desh Kar Roy,(2) where the written opinions were regarded as mere minutes, and not as judgments, on the ground that in order to there being a final judgment of the Court, there must have been a final meeting and consideration by all the Judges who heard the case as to what their judgment was to be.(3) An objection having been raised to the legality of a judgment on the ground that the Judge wrote it after he had been transferred, it was held that this section afforded an answer.(4) It is not necessary that the judgment should have been written by the Judge before he has taken leave or left the post which he was occupying when he heard the case.(5) This rule is not mandatory.(6)

Judgment to be signed.

3. The judgment shall be dated and signed by the Judge in open Court at the time of pronouncing it and, when once signed, shall not afterwards be altered or added to, save as provided by section 152 or on review. [s. 202.]

"Altered."—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 185. Rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts (O. XLIX. r. 3) in their original jurisdictions. Where a party dies after hearing, but before judgment, which is reserved, entry may be made nunc pro tunc.(7) The judgment, which must be written, may be altered either before pronouncement, or after pronouncement, but before signature, provided that in such latter case the alteration is itself pronounced. This rule prohibits the Judge, subject to the exceptions stated, from adding to (or altering (8)) his judgment after he has pronounced, dated, and signed it.(9) Where a Court raises several issues, and records findings on some only of them, it is not open to it subsequently to add to its judgment further findings on the remaining issues, although they may lead to the same conclusions as previously arrived at.(10) In the High Court, where judgments are often delivered orally and taken down by the Assistant Registrar, the Judge may, and does usually, revise the judgment out of Court before signature, and then returns the judgment to the record.

Judgments of Small Cause Courts.

4. (1) Judgments of a Court of Small Causes need not contain more than the points for determination and the decision thereupon.

Judgments of other Courts.

(2) Judgments of other Courts shall contain a concise statement of the case, the points for determination, the decision thereon, and the reasons for such decision.

Small Cause Courts.—See sect. 185 of Code of 1859. The rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts (O. XLIX. r. 3). It is in conformity with the limited summary jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts that their judgments should also be of a summary character. The first paragraph applies also to Courts invested with Small Cause Court powers.(1) Other judgments should state the reasons for the decision, and thus give the Appellate Court both a proof that the case has received such consideration, as also that assistance which it is entitled to expect.(2) As to judgments of Appellate Courts, see O. XLI. r. 32, post, and in the case of appeals to the Privy Council, sect. 42 of the Charter.(3) A decree founded on a judgment not in accordance with this rule is not according to law; and therefore the High Court, under sect. 25 of the P. S. C. C. Act (IX. of 1887), has jurisdiction to pass such order in the matter as it thinks fit.(4) In such a case the High Court may set aside the decree and remand the case for trial upon the merits with reference to the order which it has made.(5) When a judgment is defective, an Appellate Court, which is a Court of fact, may itself deal with the case as it appears on the record; (6) and on second appeal it should remand the case, directing the Judge to record his decision and the grounds thereof,(7) unless it elects to act under the new sect. 103, ante.

Court to state its decision on each issue.

Courts (O. XLIX. r. 3). This rule renders it imperative upon the Court to pronounce its opinion upon such issues as may be necessary for the disposal of the suit. It does not, however, disable the Court from determining the other issues also.(1) In fact, it is convenient that this should be done where evidence has been allowed to be given on all the issues, since by omitting to do so a case may have to be remanded which might otherwise have been finally decided on appeal.(2) The findings, however, on issues other than those upon the determination of which the decree is based ought not to form part of the Court's decree, and will on application for that purpose be struck out.(3)

Contents of decree.

6. (1) The decree shall agree with the judgment: it shall contain the number of the suit, the names and descriptions of the parties, and particulars of the claim, and shall specify clearly the relief granted or other determination of the suit. [s. 206.]

(2) The decree shall also state the amount of costs incurred in the suit, and by whom or out of what property and in what proportions such costs are to be paid.

(3) The Court may direct that the costs payable to one party by the other shall be set off against any sum which is admitted or found to be due from the former to the latter. [s. 221.]

Applicability of rule.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 189. This rule does not apply to High Courts (4) in original jurisdiction. An opinion has been expressed that the section of the former Code, by virtue of the operation of sects. 582 and 632 of that Code, was applicable to the High Courts on the appellate side, but that if that was not so the Court had an inherent jurisdiction to bring its decrees in accordance with its judgments.(5) As to decrees in appeal, see O. As regards this case, it is to be observed that the Court need not have tried the question of occupancy at all. compromise is not such a judgment as is contemplated by this rule, there being no expression of judicial opinion on the merits of the case.(1)

Contents of decree.—The decree must agree with the judgment, and under the next rule the Judge should be satisfied of such agreement before he signs it. The material findings in each case should be embodied in the decree, and if they are not, it is incumbent on the parties to avoid their being bound by decisions against which they have no right of appeal, to apply to the Court which passed the decree to amend it in accordance with the judgment,(2) for evidence cannot be given in execution to clear up uncertainty in the decree.(3) Decrees should be drawn up in such a way as to be certain and capable of execution,(4) and as to be self-contained and capable of execution without reference to any other document.(5) But if on reference to the record the defect in the decree can be so far met as to render the decree capable of execution, it should be executed.(6) For though Courts should be careful not to draw up imperfect decrees, it is also just that litigants should not be deprived of the fruits of their success owing to the carelessness of the Court or its officers in the preparation of the decree.(7)

In order to see what an ambiguous decree really means, the Court may look both to the judgment, pleadings and the record, for the decree states only the relief or other determination of the suit, but not the grounds of determination, nor does it afford any information as to the matters which were in issue.(8) And the Judge passing the decree being the most suitable person to construe it, a Superior Court will not ordinarily feel itself justified in placing on it any different construction.(9) In a recent case in the Calcutta High Court a decree of a lower Appellate Court was set aside on second appeal, not because it was erroneous but because its meaning was doubtful.(10)

to him in the ordering part, even though his name is mentioned in it elsewhere.(1) What is intended to be ordered should be expressly declared.(2) For anything which the party executing the decree is to recover must be found in the decree which he is executing, and not elsewhere: and which decree must be executed as it stands; such as costs; (3) interest; (4) mesne profits; (5) or interest on mesne profits.(6) The title-deeds of an estate, leases, and other documents of the like kind are accessory to the estate, and pass with it, whether the transfer is made by conveyance, certificate of sale, or decree for possession.(7)

A decree "according to the terms of the judgment-debtor's written statement," incorporates the terms of it.(8) A decree for "the plaintiff's claim with costs," was held to mean the claim as laid in the plaint.(9) The words "the plaintiff is to have judgment for his moiety with interest at the full legal rate and the costs of the proceedings in the Court below," have been held to give plaintiff a decree for the moiety claimed by him, i.e. the sum which he alleged to be due for principal plus interest, with interest from the date of suit up to realization.(10) A decree declaring that the defendant has a right of occupancy on payment of a proper rent without defining the rent is defective,(11) and so is a decree for exclusive possession of land not in the sole possession of the judgment-debtors, the shares of the different shareholders not having been defined;(12) as also a declaratory decree regarding the possession of an idol from time to time by contending parties which does not define the period of worship by each, and provide for the reconveyance of the idol.(13) As to decrees for accounts,(14)

Where the plaintiffs were entitled to ask for the performance of the part of a contract in which they were interested, and the defendant claimed execution of the whole, to which the plaintiffs did not object, the Court, it was held, ought to have passed a decree directing execution of the whole contract instead of rejecting the claim.(7)

In a suit against a legal representative, the decree should state that it is against the defendant in that character.(8)

During the pendency of a suit brought by A for immoveable property, A died, and his only son was allowed to represent him. It was held that in the decree he should be described as "substituted appellant as representative of his father A." (9)

The relief granted must be clearly specified. It is not within the scope of this note to discuss what relief should be granted in any particular case, but certain principles of general application may be here referred to. The relief granted should be consistent with the pleadings.(10) As a general rule a plaintiff should not be decreed more than, or a relief different from, that which he asked for; (1) though relief may be prayed for in the alternative.(2) Where, however, the amount of mesne profits is directed by the decree to be ascertained in execution, the plaintiff is not limited to the amount claimed in the plaint.(3) As to purchase by plaintiff during pendency of proceedings, see note.(4) Where a plaintiff sued, while his lease was still running, to recover possession, and the loan expired after action brought, but before decree: held that the decree should have declared right to possession with mesne profits, but should not have declared actual possession to be given.(5) The relief given must of course be one authorized by law. So in decreeing a claim on a simple money bond a Court has no authority to direct the realization of the money out of any named property, and thus make it a charge upon such property.(6)

Where a decree of a Lower Court is confirmed on appeal, and that decree directs something to be done within a specified time, the time is to be counted from the date of the appellate decree.(7) But the rule does not apply if the appeal is withdrawn; (8) and the fact that an appeal has been presented does not enlarge the time for payment of the sum decreed, or prevent the decree from being executed.(9) The mention in a decree of a term when a particular right is to become enforceable is not a condition precedent, but indicates a term from which limitation runs.(10)

If the decree is not accurately and properly drawn up, the party should apply to amend (vide post).

Costs.—The actual amount of costs may not be settled in the judgment, but, under the second paragraph of the rule, have to be determined subsequent to judgment for entry in the decree. An order passed by the Court determining such amount must be treated as a continuation or completion of the judgment.(11) The decree must state the amount of costs, and by whom, and in what proportions, they are to be paid. No costs, nor interest on costs, can be recovered unless they are mentioned in the decree, though the judgment says they should be given.(1) The mere specification of costs without an allotment of responsibility for them is not sufficient.(2) But it was said to be not necessary that the specific sums which go to make up the costs should be set forth.(3) Where an order denotes generally that costs should be paid, and then afterwards specifies a particular sum in respect of those costs, the specified sum comprises all the costs to which the party will be entitled.(4) It is not the practice, where costs of an interlocutory proceeding have been disposed of, to consider that an award of the general costs of the suit interferes with the order disposing of those partial costs.(5) If there is a set-off on account of costs, interest should only run after the set-off has been deducted.(6) The third clause is taken from sect. 221 of the last Code. It has been held that a decree for the payment of money and for costs in the suit is indivisible; so that its benefit as regards costs cannot be transferred apart from the rest.(7) See notes to sect. 35, ante.

Amendment of decree.—Every Court has inherent power over its own records so long as those records are in its power, and it can set right any mistake in them.(8) A decree is the decree of the Court and not of the parties. It is the bounden duty of a Court, of its own motion, to see that its decrees are in accordance with the judgments, and to correct them if necessary. There is, therefore, no limitation for an application to amend the decree.(9) R. 3 prohibits the alteration of a signed and dated judgment save (except in the case of clerical errors) by review. Sect. 152, which embodies the third paragraph of the former sect. 206, gives a power to amend the decree, it being a right incident to any Court to correct its formal records in such way, if needed, as will make them represent truly the decision which was intended to be judicially expressed when the judgment was delivered.(1) This may be done where there is clerical or arithmetical error,(2) or a variance with the judgment.(3) The power is, however, limited to this, and should not be exercised except in accordance with the terms of r. 3 or sect. 152, ante.(4) When a decree is in perfect accordance with the judgment, it cannot, subject to the provisions of sect. 152, ante, be altered, however erroneous the latter may be.(5) The Code gives no power to alter or vary the decree. A review of judgment or an appeal can alone do this.(6) The High Court has no power to alter its own decrees except under the provisions of this rule or sect. 114, ante.(7) It has, however, been recently held that a party is not limited to the remedy given by these provisions, and that a suit will lie to rectify a mistake in a decree ; (8) but in another case it has been stated that this can only be in special circumstances, and that as a general rule such a suit is not maintainable.(9) An application to amend may be refused if made a long time after the date of the decree, and the latter should not be amended after execution is barred.(10) A decree, however, has been amended subsequently to a Court sale.(11)

Apparently, according to one view under the last Code, a decree might have been altered either by way of application under sect. 206 or under sect. 623.(12) If an application for review was made on several grounds, and one of them referred to a clerical mistake, and if the other grounds were held to be untenable, the Court might reject the application and refer the applicant to his remedy under sect. 206. If it did not do so, but on the application for a review amended the clerical mistake, the decree drawn up became the final decree, and an appeal lay if it was brought within the prescribed time from such final decree.(13)

Proceedings under sect. 206 could not, it has been said, be regarded as of the same nature in any respect as proceedings under sect. 623 corresponding with sect. 114. In the former case the correctness of the judgment is not questioned, it is assumed; but the jurisdiction arises from the fact that the decree as drawn up and signed is not in accordance with the judgment. In the latter case, not only the correctness of the decree but the correctness of the judgment is questioned, and if the application under sect. 623 (now 114) is allowed, a rehearing of the suit or appeal becomes necessary. In the former case there is no rehearing.(1) It has, however, also been held that there may be a review not only where there is something faulty in the judgment itself, but in cases of amendment of decree which do not necessitate any alteration in the judgment, and that therefore an order passed on an application under the former section was substantially an order passed on review within the meaning of Art. 179 of the Limitation Act.(2)

There is a distinction between a case of amendment and one of novation or substitution. Where an instrument is amended so as to express the real intention which it was intended to express, but which it did not completely express, the transaction is not in substance varied, but its inaccurate description is only rectified. Except, therefore, as specially provided for in sect. 32 of the last Code (now O. I. rr. 8–10, 11), an amended decree is operative from the date of the original decree.(3) Assuming, however, that the date of the decree is the date of the judgment, and therefore the date of the decree is not the date of amendment when the date of the judgment remains unaltered, the question arises whether an application for execution of a decree is affected by an application under this rule. It has been held that such an application is not a step in aid of execution,(4) and therefore as such does not save limitation. It has, however, also been held that an order passed upon an application under the former section was substantially an order passed upon review of judgment within the meaning of the third clause of Art. 179 of the Limitation Act, and that such an application saved limitation.(5) A decree, moreover, is not operative until the amount for which execution is to be had has been ascertained by the Court.(6) It was held by Subramania Ayyar, J., that where a decree is rightly amended, the date of the rectification is immaterial with reference to the calculation of the time in which any appeal may be preferred against such decree. But where a decree is wrongly varied, a party affected by such variation is entitled to calculate the time during which an appeal may be preferred as commencing from the date of the variation.(1) The rest of the Court, however, apparently held that the time for appealing must be reckoned from the date of the original decree and not from the date of the amendment, but that it could strike out the improper amendment, no petition for revision being necessary.(2)

What Court may amend.—Where a decree requires amendment, the party aggrieved should apply to the Court in which it was granted, and should not appeal on this ground, as in default of such application an appeal is unnecessary.(3) Where the decree was imperfect and could not be drawn up from the judgment, and the Judge who gave the judgment was no longer Judge of the district, the High Court ordered a fresh trial.(4) The decree of an Appellate Court supersedes the decree of the first Court, even where the appellate decree merely affirms the original decree and does not reverse or modify it. Where a decree has been affirmed on appeal, the only decree which can be amended is the decree to be executed, viz. that of the Appellate Court; and the only Court which has jurisdiction to amend the appellate decree is the Court of Appeal. If, therefore, the Appellate Court reverses, modifies, or affirms by dismissal of the appeal the decree of the first Court, the Lower Court has, after the appellate decree, no power to amend.(5) The Bombay High Court has held (6) that an exception exists to this rule in the case of appeals dismissed under sect. 551 (now O. XLI. r. 11), it being said that such a dismissal leaves the decree of the Lower Court untouched, neither confirmed nor varied nor reversed, with the result that it remains the decree of the Lower Court, which can amend it. Practically, however, the effect of such dismissal is to confirm the decree, and it has also been held that the Lower Court cannot amend either in the case of appeals dismissed under sect. 551 (now O. XLI. r. 11) or tried after notice to the respondent.(7) Where a decree after being affirmed on appeal is amended by the original Court and no step is taken to set aside the amended decree, the latter is binding between the parties, and its validity cannot be challenged in execution proceedings on the ground that the original Court had no jurisdiction to make the amendment.(1) The Court of first instance has no jurisdiction to amend a decree on the application of a non-appealing defendant, when the decree has been confirmed on an appeal by the other defendants.(2)

In executing a decree the Court of execution must take the decree as it finds it. It cannot amend the decree or alter it in any way, though it is bound, of course, to construe the decree. The decree in execution may be the decree of the High Court, and the proper Court to execute that decree may be the Court of the Munsif by whom the suit was first decided. The Munsif in respect of a decree made by an Appellate Court would be bound, as the Court executing the decree, to execute the decree whether he approved of it or not, even if the decree had been one made by himself.(3) And no evidence can be given in execution to amend uncertainty in the decree sought to be executed.(4)

Notice.—The Court can only amend the decree after such notice as may enable either party to prefer objections.(5)

Erroneous order of amendment; how to be attacked.—An order passed amending a decree is a separate adjudication and is not merely a part of the original decree.(6) Such an order is not appealable.(7) It may, however, be revised under sect. 622 (now s. 115),(8) or, it has been held, sect. 15, of the Charter.(9) As already observed, the decisions are not entirely agreed upon the point whether a wrong order should be attacked by way of appeal from the decree as amended or by way of revision of the order of amendment. It is plain that if a decree is properly amended and exception is taken to the decree and not to the amendment, then an appeal should be brought against the amended decree. If no objection is taken to the decree as originally framed, but it is alleged that it has been improperly amended, then, as what is complained of is the order of amendment, the remedy should be according to the weight of authority by way of revision of the order of amendment, and not by way of appeal against the amended decree. The third case is where there is objection both to the original decree and to the amendment on the ground that it was not warranted, there being no variance or clerical error. It is not clear on the authorities what course should be taken, but it would appear reasonable to allow all questions in such a case to be raised in an appeal from the amended decree. An order amending can be objected to in execution of the decree (1) and an appeal lies from an order passed in execution.(2)

High Court.—Rules 1–8 of this Order do not apply. See O. XLIX. r. 3.

Revision.—It was held that proceedings under sect. 206 of the last Code terminated in an order which could be dealt with on revision, as where the Court acted beyond its jurisdiction in making an addition to the decree not warranted by the judgment.(3)

Date of decree.

7. The decree shall bear date the day on which the judgment was pronounced, and, when the Judge has satisfied himself that the decree has been drawn up in accordance with the judgment, he shall sign the decree. [s. 205.]

Decree.—This rule does not apply to High Courts in exercise of original jurisdiction, O. XLIX. r. 3. When a person has the judgment of the Court that he shall have a decree, it may be said that he then obtains his decree. The decree, when it is drawn up afterwards, relates back to that time.(4) But a formal decree must follow judgment, and is a necessary part of the ultimate procedure in all suits, though inadvertently it is not in so many terms required by the Code as a necessary proceeding after judgment. Without a decree a judicial record does not speak, and wanting it no proceeding subsequent to the judgment can with any certainty be taken. It is in substance as well as form the mouthpiece of the suit in its immediate result.(5) Whatever be the form of decree a separate formal decree should be drawn up. A copy of the judgment with the schedule of costs appended is insufficient.(6) A decree must be in a civil suit,(7) and differs from an order in that the former expresses the result of the judicial proceeding by way of suit or appeal, and so far as suits and appeals are concerned, the latter are confined to such orders as are given in the course of proceedings, and do not finally dispose of them. Date.—The decree must bear the date on which judgment is delivered, and not the date on which it is drawn up,(1) and a decree operates from this date and not from that on which it may be subsequently amended.(2) Limitation thus runs from the date the decree bears, that is, the date of the judgment; (3) though a suitor is entitled, in computing the period within which he can appeal, to deduct the time between the delivery of the judgment and the actual issuing of the decree.(4)

"Satisfied himself."—It is the duty of the parties, or rather of their pleaders, to see that a decree is drawn up in the proper form, and the signatures of the pleaders are generally obtained before the decree is finally signed.(5) But though the duties of the pleaders remain as they were, the Judge is not relieved by any action on their part from satisfying himself personally as to the correctness of his decree.

"Sign."—After the decree has been duly signed it becomes and must be regarded as a decree of that date. Once a judgment is pronounced and the decree signed, it becomes a final decree, which may become the subject-matter of appeal or review. It cannot be altered except under the provisions of sect. 152 or O. XX. r. 3, or those relating to review.(6)

Procedure where Judge has vacated office before signing decree.

Decree for immoveable property.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 190. Sect. 207 of last Code. The words "can be" have been substituted for "is identified." The decree should show distinctly and accurately what property it deals with, giving the boundaries and details of the property which the Court intends shall be covered by the decree, for if these are not given the decree may be impossible of execution.(1) Where this is not done the decree-holder's remedy lies in an immediate application to the Court which made the decree to have it rectified.(2) Evidence cannot, however, be given in the execution department to amend any uncertainty in the decree.(3) Where a Judge decreed possession with wasilat without declaring specifically that plaintiffs were to recover the share which they had purchased in an undivided estate or specific land representing that share, the plaintiffs were held not entitled to be put in possession of any specific lands.(4)

10. Where the suit is for moveable property, and the decree is for the delivery of such property, the decree shall also state the amount of money to be paid as an alternative if delivery cannot be had. [s. 208.]

Decree for delivery of moveable property.

Suit for moveable property.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 191. If there is a dispute as to the moveable property claimed, the Court must of course determine it before passing its decree. It cannot leave the matter to be settled in execution.(5) If it then passes a decree for delivery, it must state the amount to be paid as an alternative. This is ordinarily the value of the property in question.(6) The Court may also pass a decree for damages.(7) This section is in accordance with English law which took away from the defendant the option to retain the goods or pay their value. Now payment can only be made if delivery cannot be had. If the goods are capable of delivery they must be delivered.(8) An alternative prayer for value of goods as compensation does not alter the character of a suit.(9)

Decree may direct payment of instalments.

11. (1) Where and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money, the Court may for any sufficient reason at the time of passing the decree order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments, with or without interest, notwithstanding anything contained in the contract under which the money is payable.

Order, after decree, for payment by instalments.

(2) After the passing of any such decree the Court may, on the application of the judgment-debtor and with the consent of the decree-holder, order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments on such terms as to the payment of interest, the attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor, or the taking of security from him, or otherwise, as it thinks fit.

Decree for payment of money.—Act VII. of 1859, sect. 194. Ordinarily, if a party is entitled to relief, he is also entitled to a decree awarding it to him at once. Therefore it was held that a Court in making a decree could not allow the defendant a period for payment of the amount decreed, for the effect of such an order is that the decree-holder is debarred from executing his decree until the expiration of such period.(1) This rule, however, authorizes the Court in a particular class of cases, viz. decrees for money, to give the debtor time to discharge the amount awarded by directing payment in instalments. But the authority given is strictly limited to these cases. Therefore the section is not applicable in a suit for the recovery of the amount of a bond debt by the sale of property hypothecated by such bond, such a suit not being merely one for money; (2) nor to a suit to enforce a lien or an annuity called nankar.(3) It was, however, held to apply to cases referred to in sect. 58 of Act VII. of 1869, and to give the Courts powers to make rent decrees payable by instalments.(4) The former section, it was held, did not confer any authority on the Courts to relieve a contracting party from an express stipulation, in a bond payment by instalments, as to the consequence of default in punctual payment of the instalments.(5) In the case cited the decree did not in compliance with the Code contain any direction as to the agreement to pay by instalments.(6) It has been held that a decree for payment of money includes a decree made under O. XXXIV. r. 6.(7)

"The Court."—That is to say, the Court which passed the decree.(1) The order may be made in or at the time of passing the decree, or subject to consent after the decree. If the case is one in which the Court itself could not have made a decree for payment by instalments, much less can the Court of execution vary that decree so as to give it an illegal effect in carrying it into execution.(2) On the other hand, an order under this rule alters the decree, which can only be executed subject to such alteration; (3) and therefore if the Court erroneously grants time to pay, the order, if not corrected, must be executed as passed.(4)

"Sufficient reason."—The existence of this will depend upon the facts of the particular case. The Court will consider the circumstances under which the debt was contracted, the conduct of the debtor, his financial position, and so forth, and instalments should be directed where the defendant shows his bona fides by offering to pay anything like a fair proportion of his debt at once.(5)

"Postponed." "Instalments."—Payment by instalments means that the defendant is to be directed to pay the amount decreed by partial payments to be made at specified periods. The former section did not authorize a Court to say that the defendant has the option of paying the amount decreed within a particular period after the decree.(6) Now the rule expressly provides for an order postponing payment of the decretal amount. A temporary postponement is a smaller concession than a scheme of instalments, and in many cases such a discretion might be fitly exercised without waiting, as under the former Code, for a judgment-debtor's arrest under sect. 337A of that Code. The powers given should be exercised with a due consideration for the interests of the creditor as well as those of the debtor. Thus, an order allowing nine years to pay a debt of Rs.440 was reversed, and the period reduced by half.(7) The rule gives the Court a discretion, and it is not unusual to state in the order for payment by instalments that in default of payment of one instalment the whole debt shall become payable.(8) The Court has a discretion to order or refuse interest, but if it be the intention to give interest this should be expressly declared.(9)

Order after decree.—As the effect of such an order is to alter the decree, this can only be done with the consent (2) of both parties. The limitation for an application to pay in instalments by consent is six months from the date of the decree.(6)

the plaintiff has no specific interest until decree.(1) A suit for mesne profits only is not within the section.(2)

"Recovery of possession of immoveable property."—The section does not apply to other suits for damages, in which suits the question of damages must ordinarily be determined at the trial.(3) O. XXVI. r. 9, however, allows a commission to issue to ascertain the amount both of any mesne profits or damages.(4)

"Mesne profits."—The Code of 1859 did not contain any definition of this term. The Code of 1877 added an Explanation, which was the same as that attached to sect. 211 of the last Code down to the word "thereupon." That section repeated that explanation with an addition, viz. "together with interest on such profits." (5) The definition of mesne profits has now been removed to sect. 2, clause (12).

Mesne profits are in the nature of damages, which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case.(6) There is no analogy between interest awarded under sect. 34 and mesne profits claimed and awarded under this rule.(7)

The object of a suit for mesne profits is to compensate the owner of land for being kept out of possession and deprived of the profits of the land. The measure of the compensation is ordinarily the loss which he has suffered.(8) Where a party is dispossessed of immoveable property, the cause of action as to wasilat accrues to him on the date on which he would, but for the fact of dispossession, have received such wasilat.(9) Parties in possession are liable for wasilat to the legal owners whom they keep out of possession, even though there was no mala fides on their part,(10) and whether the wrongdoer derived any profit himself from the possession of the land or not; (11) though, as the principle is that the defendant should make up to the plaintiff what he has lost, a Court is right in excluding lands of such a nature as would under ordinary circumstances yield no profit.(1)

All persons in wrongful possession, irrespective of how they got in, are liable,(2) such as a mortgagor from date of foreclosure ; (3) an auction purchaser whose purchase is declared invalid ; (4) a person in bonâ fide possession without knowledge of defect in his title ; (5) an ijaradar together with his zemindar,(6) a body of intermediate holders combining to keep the true owner out of possession ; (7) a sebait claiming the land as such.(8) In the under-mentioned case the defendants were not all in possession, yet as they had all combined to oppose the plaintiff's possession, they were held all jointly liable for the wasilat.(9) But where a person is in rightful possession until a sale or decree is set aside, though he is bound to account for mesne profits, the calculation of which is to be based on a proper discharge of the stewardship of the property, he is not a trespasser, and as such liable to make good any loss sustained by the rightful owner being kept out of possession.(10) In the case, moreover, of any wrong, the liability of a defendant is limited to damages for the wrong which he has himself done, and if the defendant was excluded from possession he cannot be said to have actually or even impliedly received the profits, nor could he with diligence have received them.(11) So the Privy Council have held that a person who had not himself received the mesne profits, having come into possession of a taluq upon its being released from management under the Oudh Taluqdar's Relief Act, 1870, would not be chargeable with sums which, as it was alleged, might have been received by way of mesne profits, but had not been received in consequence of the manager's wilful default. Whatever case might have been made against the manager of the estate, the taluqdar could not be charged with anything more than was actually received by him.(12) Mesne profits ought not to be estimated for any period during which the defendant who is to be made responsible for them was not active in keeping the plaintiff out of possession. Therefore a defendant cannot be made to pay in respect of years when possession was in the hands of an officer of the Court.(13) But where a defendant who had been in wrongful possession abandoned the land without notice to the decree-holder, it was held that the land must be held to have continued in the judicial possession of the judgment-debtor, who was liable for mesne profits.(1) In a suit for damages against several persons for jointly combining to keep plaintiff out of possession they are all equally liable to him, and none of them can restrict their liability for mesne profits to that portion only of which, by their joint agreement, they were in possession.(2) In some cases, however, the liability has been decided in proportion to the amount of profits that each has derived from his own individual wrongful possession.(3) The Court is competent to apportion the damages in respect of the portions of land held by the defendants; aliter where the defendants have jointly taken possession of a particular portion of such land.(4) It was held that a plaintiff must bring a suit against joint wrongdoers, though what he does in execution of his decree is another matter.(5)

If the Court finds that a plaintiff has been dispossessed he is primâ facie entitled to mesne profits in respect of the period of dispossession, and it is not necessary for him to prove the actual collections made during this period, for this is proof which he would possibly be unable to supply. It is sufficient to show what is the annual profit which in ordinary years can be collected, as, for instance, the profits for the years preceding or subsequent to the period of dispossession.(6)

Mesne profits include profits actually received, or which might have been received. In other words, if the mesne profits actually received are those which ought to have been received, the plaintiff gets them. If, however, they are less than what the plaintiff could have got, they must be assessed on the basis of his possible profits. The Court has to ascertain what the person in wrongful possession could have realized by ordinary diligence and not merely what he actually received.(7) This really means what the plaintiff could have realized, for the person in wrongful possession may place himself in the position of, and for this purpose is taken to be in the position of, the true holder, so as to charge him with the profits which might have been made by the true owner.(8)

It was said to be not clear whether a Court of Equity would ear-mark the profits of a trespasser invested in real property and follow them.(1)

Wilful default is charged against persons in rightful possession, though accountable for their dealings with the property. Mesne profits are chargeable against those wrongfully (2) in possession. Indeed, the adoption of the principle of wilful default would be more favourable to the defendant than the principle of the Code; for there may be values recoverable by ordinary diligence which yet it would not be wilful default not to recover.(3)

Mesne profits, how calculated.—There is no abstract principle independent of the particular facts which determines the assessment of mesne profits in every case. The Court ought first to ascertain the facts and the nature of the plaintiff's possession of the land before ouster, and then determine the principle applicable in the particular case.(4) When the facts are disclosed, the determining principle is this—What was the character of the possession of the plaintiff before he was ousted? and what has the owner lost? (5) Mesne profits are thus whatever profits the wrongdoer might with ordinary diligence have received from an occupation or position similar to that of the party wrongfully dispossessed, whether it be that of a cultivating ryot, landlord or zemindar (6) or talookdar.(7) Where a person claiming mesne profits was himself the cultivator before dispossession, he is entitled to the profits which he would have made cultivating the land if he had not been dispossessed. The measure of damages is the value of the crops.(8) And there is no distinction in respect of assessment of mesne profits between raiyati land held by a raiyat and the proprietor's zerait, or private land ordinarily cultivated by him, except as to the costs of cultivation.(9) Where land is raiyati, and the true owner is a rent receiver, assessment of mesne profits should be made on the basis of fair and reasonable rent.(10) Primâ facie it is fair to infer that a person in possession of land may by ordinary diligence get rent for it according to the prevailing rates for such land, and that the true owner wrongfully dispossessed has been a loser by that amount.(1)

If the true owner is placed in the same position as if he had all along been in possession, that is all that he is ordinarily entitled to, and it is not reasonable that he should receive any additional benefit, or that the person in wrongful possession should not only make compensation but be fined as well. On this principle it has been held that ordinarily the collection and other expenses incurred by the trespasser will be allowed, and that it is only when the trespass is of a very aggravated character (2) that the Court, in its discretion, may refuse such expenses.(3) The principle has been stated in another form, namely, that costs of collection and expenses should only be allowed when the trespasser entered the land in the exercise of a bonâ fide claim of right; but that when the trespass is malicious and without bona fides, though the trespasser may still claim all necessary payments, such as Government revenue or ground rent, it is not imperative on the Court to allow him even such charges as would ordinarily but voluntarily be incurred by an owner in possession.(4) But though a person, when sued may be entitled to a deduction, he has no right to sue to recoup himself for his losses against the true owner, and must bear the burthen of his own wrong.(5)

The mode of calculation in cases of decrees for and against each of the parties, is to calculate and rateably divide them, and then to allow a set-off to the extent of the profits actually received by each sharer, the deficit in each year being made good by the party who received in excess of his share.(1)

Proof necessary.—In a suit for mesne profits it is, as in other cases, incumbent on the plaintiff to establish not only the existence of his right, but also the extent of it. The first he does by proof that the defendant has wrongfully deprived him of enjoyment,(2) and the second by proof of the duration of the wrongful possession, and it is for that period only that damages are claimable.(3) Where, however, it is shown that a particular jama is payable in respect of a property, it lies upon the wrongdoer to show that the sum has not been realized.(4) On him, as the party in possession and having the means of information, lies the onus of proving what is the actual amount of mesne profits.(5) It cannot be laid down, however, as a general proposition that the burden of proof in this respect is always on the defendant. It depends on the circumstances, according to which presumptions may or may not arise in favour of the plaintiff.(6)

In calculating wasilat, evidence is usually taken of the rent paid. The party in possession is called on to produce his accounts, which are compared with the pottahs and dakhilas in the ryot's possession. Jummabundi papers filed by patwaris under the zemindar's supervision have been accepted as primâ facie evidence of the profits of the estate.(7) But settlement papers thirty years old without inquiry into the actual proceeds of the estate during the period of dispossession are useless as a basis to work on.(8) When the amount of mesne profits demanded is merely approximately given, the plaintiff is not bound by what he has said in the plaint, but may be given more, though, of course, such statement may be used as evidence against him.(9) The ordinary rule, however, being that a plaintiff cannot recover more than he claims in the plaint, he will be limited to it where the rate or amount is not stated approximately.(1)

As regards mesne profits before suit, as these have accrued due and the plaintiff has a cause of action in respect thereof, a plaintiff suing for mesne profits is bound to put forward his whole claim. If he does not, a subsequent suit for mesne profits prior to the first suit will not lie.(2)

Mesne profits are demandable from the date upon which they become annually due.(3) But a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of plaintiff's title has been held not liable for mesne profits from any date earlier than the institution of the suit where the plaintiff has been guilty of laches,(4) and mesne profits were only allowed from the date of suit in other cases.(5) Under Art. 109 of the Limitation Act a defendant is liable for mesne profits received, or which might have been with due diligence received, during the three years before date of suit, and not before. This period has no reference to the time when rents fall due.(6)

Accruing before suit.—The assessment of mesne profits was held to be an essential part of the decree in the suit, and not a proceeding in execution, and therefore something which must be done by the Court trying the case, which was authorized to make a decree in it. It cannot be left to another Court, which, when the final decree is made, may have to execute it.(7) In a suit for recovery of possession, and for mesne profits from the date of suit, it was held that a Munsif could ascertain and award mesne profits even though they were in excess of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court.(8) The Court had either to determine the matter itself or direct an inquiry. But it must have done one or the other. Thus a decree awarding immediate mesne profits at the rate admitted by the defendant, and larger mesne profits contingently on a higher rate being proved at the time of execution, was held to be irregular.(9)

Decree.—A decree declaring the liability for mesne profits, but not determining the amount if worked out after the death of a defendant, did not, it was held, bind the heirs not parties.(1)

Under the Code of 1859, the Court might reserve the inquiry "for the execution of the decree," a phrase which gave rise to difficulty.(2) The Court under the last Code might "direct an inquiry." The proceedings were part of and a continuation of the suit, and no final decree existed to execute or appeal from until they were closed. That part of the decree which denoted possession to be given was final, but the other part was interlocutory, and became final when the amount payable was fixed. An application to ascertain the amount of mesne profits was not an application for execution, but an application by which the decree-holder moved the Court in a pending suit to make a final decree regarding mesne profits.(3) And for this reason an application to ascertain the amount of mesne profits awarded by a decree was not affected by limitation.(4) The Bombay High Court, however, held that a decree under sect. 212 of the last Code was necessarily subject to the limitation laid down in sect. 211 of the same Code, and that mesne profits for more than three years from the date of the decree should not be awarded, even though possession was not delivered during that period.(5) The investigation into mesne profits, directed by the decree, was nothing more than a continuation of the inquiry which was set on foot at the trial into the merits of the plaintiff's case against the defendant, only that it was limited to the matter of damages. It was therefore in the first place incumbent on the plaintiff to give the Court some evidence upon which it could form a reasonable conception of the amount of his loss. And the defendant was not called upon to answer the plaintiff's case until the plaintiff had given some evidence in support of it.(6) The direction as to the inquiry into the amount of mesne profits need not, it was held, necessarily be contained in the decree; (7) as to the form of which, see case cited below.(8) Once the liability of a party was fixed in the Appellate Court, the Lower Court had to confine its inquiry to the assessment of the amount of damages.(9)

The language of the amended section makes the procedure plain. The Court may either determine the amount in the decree or may give a decree for possession, and then direct an inquiry into mesne profits, etc., and dispose thereof in the final decree. In a recent case where a plaintiff had brought a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of his title, which was granted, and for mesne profits, which were disallowed, it was held that sub-sect. (2) of this rule implies that the decision with regard to possession is a preliminary decree within the meaning of sect. 2.(1)

Accruing after suit.—Sect. 211 of the last Code, which referred to mesne profits accruing subsequent to institution of suit, was held to be an enabling one, and it would, it was said,(2) be neither unreasonable nor illegal to refuse subsequent profits up to date of decree and decree immediate possession; leaving the party in whose favour the decree was made to his remedy by a regular suit if immediate possession was not had. The mere abstention therefore of the Court to award mesne profits after date of suit was held not to be a bar to any suit in respect thereof.(3) A claim for mesne profits was held distinct from a claim for recovery of possession, and it was only under sect. 44, rule A, of the last Code that such claims might be joined in one suit.(4) In order to avoid multiplicity of suits the Court was empowered to assess damages not only so far as they accrued up to the commencement of the suit, but also those accruing after suit and during the continuance of the trespass. But the section was not imperative or obligatory but discretionary.(5) Where the decree was silent touching interest or mesne profits, subsequent to the institution of the suit, they could not be given in execution; but the plaintiff was still at liberty to assert his right to such mesne profits in a separate suit.(6) Apart from the decisions cited, the matter was made clear by para. 2 of sect. 244 of the last Code. (See, however, now post.) But it had to be ascertained on a proper construction whether the judgment and decree was silent on the point. Wasilat by law is demandable up to possession, and therefore a decree for "possession with wasilat" was held to give wasilat up to the date of possession and not merely up to the date of suit.(1)

A judgment dismissing an appeal is in reality an informal mode of confirming the decree appealed against. Where, therefore, mesne profits were awarded from the institution of the suit until decree only, and the Appellate Court simply dismissed the appeal without providing for subsequent mesne profits, it was held that these could not be recovered in execution.(2) But where the original Court granted a decree for possession with "future mesne profits," and the Appellate Court approved that decree without expressly mentioning mesne profits, it was held that mesne profits were granted by reference to the original decree.(3) Where a decree was given for certain of the properties claimed and mesne profits, and the suit was dismissed as regards the other properties, and on appeal the Appellate Court reversed the decree of dismissal, it was held that the appellate decree imported an award of mesne profits on all property, the possession of which was decreed to the plaintiffs.(4)

As to Court fees (5) and form of decree under sect. 211 of the last Code,(6) see cases cited below.

Under sect. 244, clauses (a) and (b) of the last Code, the Court of execution determined questions relating to the execution. This is not so now under sect. 47 of the present Code. The present rule enacts that the Court of trial shall in continuation of the suit inquire into the question (see notes to sect. 47). The penultimate section of sect. 244 of the last Code has not been re-enacted, and probably any claim made and not expressly granted in the decree will be deemed to have been refused within the meaning of Explanation V. of sect. 11.

"Relinquishment of possession."—This clause is new. With a view to the curtailment of delay and expense, it is enacted that the claim for mesne profits should not continue till actual delivery of possession if the defendant prefers to relinquish the land with notice to the plaintiff.

"Three years."—In the Code of 1859 there was no time specified down to which mesne profits could be awarded short of that of obtaining possession. The Code of 1877 introduced the further limitation which now exists, and the rule thus restricts the time for which mesne profits can be allowed in a decree to three years from the date of the decree. Consequently where no period is mentioned the decree cannot be construed as giving the plaintiffs profits for a period longer than what the law allows the Court to give.(1) So proceedings for the purpose of ascertaining mesne profits were held to be a continuance of the original suit, and the Court was bound by these provisions. Where, therefore, a decree directed that plaintiffs should get mesne profits from a certain date until delivery of possession, the amount to be fixed in execution: held that the decree was necessarily subject to the limitation laid down in sect. 211 of the former Code, and that mesne profits for more than three years could not be awarded even though possession was not delivered during that period.(2) In executing a decree which awards mesne profits, and which is affirmed by a final Court of Appeal, the three years from the date of the decree until the expiration of which alone mesne profits are recoverable must be calculated from the date of the decree of the final Court of Appeal, and not from the date of the decree of the original Court.(3)

Interest.—The Code of 1859 provided that interest might be decreed,(4) but the Code of 1882 first included interest in the definition of mesne profits. There being no rule of law obliging the Court to allow interest upon mesne profits, it is a matter for the discretion of the Court, upon consideration of the facts, whether to allow interest or not.(5) No difference should be made as regards interest between wasilat paid in kind and paid in money.(6) A decree for interest on mesne profits from the date they were ascertained was held to mean the date on which they were ascertained by the Court, and not by the Amin.(7)

The words "together with interest on such profits" in the definition of mesne profits (see sect. 2) do not refer to interest due after the ascertainment of the amount of mesne profits due under the decree, because the Courts have otherwise been given a discretion to award interest separately on the amount so ascertained. The words, therefore, contemplate that interest should form a separate item in the calculation of the amount due as mesne profits, and a decree-holder is entitled to receive interest year by year on the amount found to be due, and not only on the amount actually ascertained and embodied in the decree.(1) The Court has jurisdiction to give or refuse interest on mesne profits as it chooses. But if it does not intend to grant interest it should expressly refuse it, for, having regard to the additional words "together with interest on such profits," a decree which merely grants mesne profits, and is silent as to interest, must be taken to mean that the mesne profits shall carry interest on them.(2) Where a decree granted mesne profits and said nothing about interest, the amount of mesne profits being left for determination in execution of the decree: held, that the decree-holder was entitled to interest upon the mesne profits due to him until such mesne profits were actually paid to him by the judgment-debtors.(3) plaintiff has an interest in the estate and that the defendant is an accounting party, and such a decree can only be averted by payment or the admission of assets and submission to a personal decree. But the Court has power to stay or dismiss frivolous or vexatious actions, and will see whether there is bona fides, whether real and substantial questions exist for determination, and whether an administration decree is the necessary and proper relief.(1) In such a case it is necessary to pass a preliminary decree, directing all such inquiries to be made and accounts taken which cannot be conveniently done in Court, but which have to be carried out before the Court is in a position to pass its final decree. The first paragraph provides for this. An order under the first paragraph is a decree, and is appealable as such. See sect. 2, ante, and notes thereto.

Insolvent estates.—The second paragraph of this rule is taken from sect. 10 of the Judicature Act of 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77). Before the Judicature Act, in administration in Chancery, a secured creditor, who had not realized his security, could prove against the assets for the whole debt and receive a dividend: he could then realize his security, and if he received in the whole more than 20*s.* in the £, he paid over the excess. In bankruptcy he had to realize his security and prove for the balance. The Act made the rule in bankruptcy applicable to administration actions. It did not (nor does this section) apply all the principles of bankruptcy to insolvent estates, but established uniformity of administration in respect of the four heads which are specifically mentioned in this section.(2) A decree for administration is a decree in favour of all creditors, and as all of them are included in the same decree, it is inequitable that one should be in a better postion than another under that decree, and therefore the Court divides the assets amongst them.(3)

(b) if and in so far as the claims decreed are different in degree, that the claim of the inferior pre-emptor shall not take effect unless and until the superior pre-emptor has failed to comply with the said provisions.

Pre-emption.—Sect. 214, Code of 1877 and 1889, amended as indicated in italics. The former section, which was frequently criticized as inadequate, has been considerably altered. In sub-clause (1), para. (b), the day is fixed. As to the power of the Appellate Court to specify another day,(1) see note. As regards delivery of possession in the same paragraph, the duty of executing and registering any necessary instrument (2) has been held to be upon the defendant. In sub-clause (2) provision has been made for the form of decrees in the case of claims decreed in favour of rival pre-emptors.(3)

The Mahomedan law is the only system prevalent in India which provides substantive rules relating to the right of pre-emption in a systematic form, though local Acts and the Code recognize the existence of the right, and lay down rules belonging to the remedy. In all cases in which the right of pre-emption is claimed, the Courts in administering equity will by analogy follow the rules of Mahomedan law, even in cases where the right is not claimed under that law, but under local usage or custom. The rules of customary pre-emption no doubt depend upon the custom itself, but where such custom is silent upon any particular point, the rule of Mahomedan law must by analogy be taken to be the rule of decision.(4)

Rules in regard to decrees in pre-emption suits were formulated for the first time in the Code of 1877, and it is conceivable that in introducing these new rules the form which they took fell short of comprehending all the various cases that might arise in consequence.(5) Sect. 214 of the last Code thus laid down no rules as to the form of the decree in cases where rival pre-emptors, possessing equal rights of pre-emption, came forward to enforce the right in respect of the same sale, or where one of rival pre-emptors possessed superior right of pre-emption to the other. The Court had to deal with such cases upon general principles of equity suited to the exigencies of each case.(1) The section again provided only for cases where costs have been decreed against a plaintiff, but not for cases where costs, instead of being awarded against the pre-emptor, were awarded in his favour by the decree. But it was held that there being no specific provision in the Code to meet this case, the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience were applicable, and that under the general rules of set-off, which are so consonant with these, a plaintiff was entitled, when depositing the purchase-money under the decree, to deduct the sum awarded to him as costs.(2)

The former section, it was held, contemplated cases where the party seeking to enforce a right of pre-emption is out of possession, and was therefore inapplicable to instances in which parties setting up such a right were already in possession.(3)

Payment of purchase-money.—If on the day on which the time for payment expires the Court is closed, the pre-emptive price may be paid on the next day that the Court is open.(4) If the pre-emptive price is not paid within the prescribed time, then as the right decreed is dependent on payment within such period, the decree for pre-emption cannot be enforced.(5) Where the plaintiff paid the money into Court, petitioning that it should be retained until mutation of names had taken place, and the defendant refused to accept the money on the ground that the payment was clogged with a condition, it was held that the payment was not saddled with a condition precluding payment before mutation and the objection was disallowed.(6) In making the payment the plaintiff may deduct his costs.(7) The question whether the plaintiff has paid the purchase-money in time is not a matter relating to the execution of a decree under sect. 244, corresponding with sect. 47, ante.(8) A decree in a suit directed that the purchase-money should be paid within a certain period from the date the decree became final. The period of limitation prescribed for an appeal from this decree expired on a day when the Court was closed: held that the appeal could be filed on the first day it opened, and that the decree did not become final till then.(9) A plaintiff who has obtained a decree can appeal within the limitation period, whether or not he has made the payment on or before the day fixed.(10)

But the mere appeal by a plaintiff or defendant will not of itself extend the time for payment.(1) The Appellate Court may if it thinks fit extend the time for payment.(2) But if the appellate decree says nothing about extending time, it has not the effect of giving the plaintiff, whether appellant or respondent, the corresponding period of time from the date of the appellate decree for payment to that which he had from the date of the decree of the Court of first instance. For this rule says that if the pre-emptive price is not paid the suit shall stand dismissed, and the decree, on the expiration of the time limited without payment by the plaintiff, becomes a decree in favour of the defendant.(3) (See first paragraph.) If the pre-emptive suit has arisen and been decreed before the vendee has paid the whole or part of the purchase-money to the vendor, the Court in disbursing the purchase-money deposited will make an order directing that the whole or part of the purchase-money (as the case may be) should be paid to the vendor or vendee, both of whom must necessarily be judgment-debtors, and as such be liable alike to payment of the costs awarded to the pre-emptor decree-holder.(4) It has been held that the profits of the property accruing between the date of the sale and the date when the pre-emptor, in accordance with the decree, paid the pre-emptive price, belonged not to the pre-emptor nor to the original vendor, but to the original vendees ; (5) and that a suit could not be successfully maintained by a pre-emptor to recover profits accruing between the date of his decree and the time when he obtained mutation of names.(6)

Suit for dissolution of partnership.—The usual forms of decree in such a suit were given in Nos. 132 and 133, Schedule IV., of the last Code. It was held that in a suit for an account of a dissolved partnership, a decree should be passed under sect. 215 of that Code, in accordance with form No. 132, Schedule IV., and it should direct an account to be taken of the dealings and transactions between the parties, and of the credits, property, and effects due and belonging to the late partnership, and it should direct the appointment of a receiver of the Decree in suit for account between principal and agent.

Suit for account between principal and agent.—In a suit by a principal against an agent for an account, on the fact of agency being established, it is the duty of the Court to direct an account to be taken of the defendant's dealings as agent. When once the plaintiff has shown that the defendant is an accounting party, it is then for the defendant to prove the amount of his receipts and disbursements.(2) When an appeal is pending in the High Court against a preliminary order made by a Subordinate Court under this section, the High Court having seisin of the appeal can, apart from the question whether the case falls within sect. 545 of that Code, make an order staying the carrying out of such order pending the hearing of the appeal.(3) These suits are not affected by section 10.(4)

17. The Court may either by the decree directing an account to be taken or by any subsequent order give special directions with regard to the mode in which the account is to be taken or vouched and in particular may direct that in taking the account the books of account in which the accounts in question have been kept shall be taken as primâ facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained with liberty to the parties interested to take such objection thereto as they may be advised.

the Government, the decree shall declare the rights of the several parties interested in the property, but shall direct such partition or separation to be made by the Collector, or by any gazetted subordinate of the Collector deputed by him in this behalf, in accordance with such declaration and with the provisions of section 54;

(2) if and in so far as such decree relates to any other immoveable property or to moveable property, the Court may, if the partition or separation cannot be conveniently made without further inquiry, pass a preliminary decree declaring the rights of the several parties interested in the property and giving such further directions as may be required.

Suits for partition.—The former Code contained no provision definitely prescribing the form of a decree for the partition of an estate or the separation of a share, though a somewhat special procedure was rendered applicable in such cases. Sect. 265 of the Code relegated the actual partition or separation of revenue-paying estates entirely to the execution department, and entrusted it to the Collector. On the other hand, sect. 396 of the same Code contemplated in the case of other immoveable property a preliminary order ascertaining the rights of the parties, which was itself a decree, but involved a final decree upon the report of the Commissioners. These sections have been in part modified, and the present rule, which is new, inserted. Any local enactment by which jurisdiction to effect "imperfect partition" of revenue-paying land is reserved exclusively to the Revenue Courts, and which contemplates a procedure inconsistent with this rule, will be saved by the terms of sect. 4, ante. The Code contemplates one preliminary decree and no more. Thus, where after the confirmation of a preliminary decree for partition on appeal, the Court of first instance directed that actual partition should be made in accordance with certain directions then given by it, it was held that no appeal would lie against such order; but its propriety could be questioned in an appeal from the final decree.(1) from "if" to "plaintiff" in the first paragraph of sect. 216 of the last Code were substituted, and the whole of the last paragraph of that section was added, by Act VII. of 1888, sect. 7.(1) An amendment has been made to give effect to the view that appeals from decrees relating to set-off should lie to the Courts to which appeals in respect of the original claim would lie. In a suit by a principal against his agent for accounts, where the agent does not specifically pray for a decree for the sum alleged to be due to him, the Court can grant a decree to the agent upon the finding that money was in fact due to him.(2)

ORDER XXI.

Execution of Decrees and Orders.

Payment under Decree.

Modes of paying money under decree.

1. (1) All money payable under a decree shall be paid as follows, namely :—

(a) into the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree ; or

(b) out of Court to the decree-holder ; or

(c) otherwise as the Court which made the decree directs.

(2) Where any payment is made under clause (a) of sub-rule (1) notice of such payment shall be given to the decree-holder.

"Payable under a decree."—Costs ordered to be paid under sect. 218 of the last Code (see now sect. 35), it was held, were not paid under a decree and should be paid under that section.(1) An instalment due under a decree may, under this rule, be paid into Court.(2) When an order has been made for the payment of money in a suit on a certain date and the Court is closed on that date, a payment made on the following day would be a good payment for the purpose of that order.(3) Payment into Court is a valid compliance with a decree, even though the decree directs payment to the decree-holder.(4) On the death of a decree-holder, the debtor should either pay the debt into Court under cl. (a) or ask for directions under cl. (c).(5)

Payment out of Court to decree-holder.

2. (1) Where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, and the Court shall record the same accordingly.

payment for adjustment, and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause, on a day to be fixed by the Court, why such payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified; and if, after service of such notice, the decree-holder fails to show cause why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, the Court shall record the same accordingly.

(3) A payment or adjustment, which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree.

Applicability.—As to the principle upon which the rule proceeds and the cases to which the prohibition contained in it is applicable, see notes, post, "Remedies of judgment-debtor." The rule applies only to the case of parties who stand in the relation of judgment-debtor and judgment-creditor at the date of the transaction.(1) It applies only to a question of payment or adjustment of a decree, and does not recognize an application by the decree-holder.(2) The former section was held not to govern payments made in execution of decrees passed under Act X. of 1859 in the Revenue Courts.(3)

"Under a decree."—In Madras it was at one time held that the former section applied only to the execution of money decrees,(4) and it was doubted whether the section applied to decrees for restitution of conjugal rights.(5) In Calcutta, and latterly in Madras also, it was held that the section dealt with the adjustment of any decree and not merely with the adjustment of a money decree.(6) The amendment by the addition of the words "of any kind" adapts this latter view. The decree may be of any kind, but money must be payable under it. As to instalment decrees, see O. XX. r. 11. The rule presupposes that there is a decree in existence. So where A sued B and obtained a decree which was reversed in the first Appellate Court; and B was about to file a special appeal when A compromised the case and gave up the property; it was held that the compromise having been effected after the decree in favour of B had been reversed, it need not have been certified to the Court.(7) And if payment is made under a decree which is set aside on appeal, the decree-holder must make restitution even though the payment has not been certified.(1) Where rent was payable for a mirasi tenure and not under a decree, the provisions of the section were held inapplicable.(2) The rule does not apply to the case of a surety who, having paid the amount due under the decree, afterwards sues the principal.(3)

"Out of Court."—The rule relates to voluntary adjustments of a decree made between parties to a suit out of Court; and not to a case where a debtor pays to the officer of the Court under the authority and pressure of the Court's process.(4) When money is paid into Court the latter must pay it out immediately to the decree-holder (5) or his ordinary legal heirs; (6) though if the payment is made by the debtor to prevent his arrest, it is not a voluntary payment, and he is entitled to be heard before the money is paid out.(7)

"Adjusted."—See as to the meaning of this term cases cited.(8) It only applies to matters occurring during the course of execution.(9)

"The decree-holder shall certify."—One joint decree-holder is not bound by the acts of another who has compromised or received payment out of Court;(10) and a joint decree-holder has ordinarily no power to give a discharge out of Court to a judgment-debtor for more than his own share of the decree.(11) The debtor should therefore not pay unless jointly or to the extent of the admitted shares.(12)

The word "decree-holder" therefore must be read as decree-holder or decree-holders. The Court will not recognize a payment to one decree-holder only in excess of that to which he is himself entitled. One of two or more joint decree-holders is not competent without being authorized by the other or others to certify satisfaction by payment out of Court of the entire decree; though he may certify satisfaction in respect of his own interest therein.(13)

On the other hand one joint decree-holder cannot by foregoing his right to execute defeat the right of another to do so: Inderjeet v. Sewaram, 5 A. H. C. R. 16 (1873).

The ordinary way of certifying a payment or adjustment is by petition (1) made by the decree-holder or judgment-debtor to the Court whose duty is to execute the decree; (2) but it can also be certified under O. XXI. r. 11, clause (e), on an application to execute the decree. It is for the party applying for execution to state any adjustment after decree.(3) If, however, one of the parties is a minor, his guardian must first obtain leave to compromise under O. XXXII. r. 7.(4) Application may be made for a certificate of part satisfaction.(5) To certify a payment or adjustment within the meaning of the section, it is insufficient for the decree-holder to certify that money has been paid or that an adjustment has been arrived at without specifying the amount of the payment or mentioning the terms of the adjustment.(6) Under this rule, as there is no time fixed within which the decree-holder is bound to certify a payment made out of Court, such payment may be certified at any time.(7) Intimation to a Collector in charge of the execution, under the provisions of the Third Schedule, amounts to a due certifying of the adjustment under this rule.(8)

It has been held that an application in 1905 for certifying payments in satisfaction of a decree sufficed to give a fresh start for limitation, either as an acknowledgment within the meaning of Sect. 19 of the Limitation Act (IX. of 1908) or as a step in aid of execution.(9)

"Judgment-debtor."—This term includes persons claiming through the judgment-debtor or in his right, e.g. an assignee from the judgment-debtor of the equity of redemption after decree.(10)

Remedies of debtor.—Under the second paragraph of the rule the judgment-debtor may apply to the Court executing the decree,(11) if the decree-holder does not certify that the adjustment be recorded,(12) and he is allowed ninety days within which to take that step.(13) Notice must issue to the decree-holder to show cause. This does not mean merely to allege cause, nor even to make out that there is room for argument, but both to allege cause and to prove it to the satisfaction of the Court.(1) If the judgment-debtor applies to certify and the application is refused, then an order under this rule being appealable (2) under sect. 47 (formerly 244), he should appeal and not bring a separate suit. An application, whether by a plaintiff or defendant, for a certificate, though decided under this rule, is none the less a question relating to the execution and satisfaction of the decree, and an appeal being available, no separate suit lies. If, however, neither the creditor nor debtor apply to certify and the decree has in fact been satisfied in whole or in part, and yet the creditor sues out execution, the debtor has a remedy by suit. As already observed, this rule prohibits recognition of an uncertified adjustment only by any Court executing the decree. But the right of suit is controlled by the provisions of sect. 47, as the operation of the latter section is not restricted by this.(3) The subject has nowhere been more lucidly treated than by Pigot, J.(4) In considering whether a suit is prohibited by sect. 47, regard must be had to two points, viz., the cause of action and the relief claimed. Numerous cases establish (5) that a Court other than a Court executing the decree can recognize an uncertified payment or adjustment of a decree in a suit based upon such payment or adjustment. This goes to the cause of action. The principle upon which such cases are allowed has been that there is a cause of action arising from negligence, fraud,(6) agreement, or trust.(7) So suits have lain to recover the money paid or property delivered.(8) or for damages.(9) Where, however, the relief sought comes within the prohibition contained in sect. 47, then a suit is barred. That section is framed to prohibit in a separate suit between the parties to the decree, any relief being granted which shall interfere with the conduct of the execution proceedings by the Court executing the decree.(10) As a general rule, questions relating to the satisfaction of the decree must be settled by an order made in the course of execution and not by a regular suit, but no Court can settle a question of satisfaction by an order made in execution unless such satisfaction shall have been duly certified.(11)

Thus a suit which interferes with the execution, such as a suit seeking a declaration that the defendant is not entitled to execute a decree and an injunction restraining execution,(1) or for a declaration that the decree has been satisfied,(2) or a suit which seeks to set aside an execution sale, whether the purchaser be the judgment creditor (3) or a stranger,(4) will not lie, being prohibited by the terms of sect. 47; as also, it has been held, a suit to secure sums paid in execution in excess of what was due under the decree.(5)

If the creditor fraudulently executes a satisfied decree and does not enter the satisfaction in his application to execute, he may be proceeded against criminally, the provision as regards uncertified adjustments not affecting the substantive Criminal Law.(6) In a recent case it was held that an application which did not recite the terms of an alleged adjustment could not be deemed to be an application of the kind contemplated by the second clause of this rule.(7)

Clause (3).—This clause corresponds, with amendments (vide post), with the last paragraph of sect. 258 of the former Code (see sect. 206 of Code of 1859), which was inserted by sect. 27 of Act VII. of 1888. The effect of this insertion was that uncertified adjustments could be recognized by other Courts than the Court executing the decree, the prohibition only extending to Courts executing decrees,(8) and to no others.(9) So the rule does not debar a Criminal Court (1) from recognizing an uncertified payment, or a Civil Court which is not executing the decree (vide ante). An adjustment not certified cannot, however, be taken cognizance of under sect. 47 by a Court of execution, and the decree must be executed notwithstanding the adjustment.(2) Prior to the addition of the last clause it was held that if the decree-holder had been induced to compromise by fraud, this was a matter which can be dealt with under the same section.(3) It was subsequently held that the proviso did not stand in the way of the judgment-debtor proving fraud.(4) But this decision has been doubted,(5) and it has recently been held by the Calcutta High Court that the executing Court cannot enquire even when the conduct of the decree-holder has been alleged to be fraudulent.(6) An objection that the provisions of the former section had no application to any payment made in pursuance of an invalid agreement not sanctioned by the Court was overruled, the section making no reference to validity. Therefore, a sum paid under an agreement void under the former section, 257A, cannot be recognized unless certified.(7) It has been held that though uncertified payments could not be recognized as adjustments of the decree, yet a creditor might give evidence of uncertified payments in order to defeat the plea of limitation.(8) The former section ran: "It shall not be recognized as a payment or adjustment of the decree." These words have been omitted in order to make it clear that the Court cannot recognize a payment or adjustment which has not been certified for any purpose whatsoever. It follows that an uncertified payment or adjustment cannot now operate to prolong the period of limitation for applying for execution under the Limitation

Transfer to Court of Small Causes.

4. Where a decree has been passed in a suit of which the value as set forth in the plaint did not exceed two thousand rupees and which, as regards its subject-matter, is not excepted by the law for the time being in force from the cognizance of either a Presidency or a Provincial Court of Small Causes, and the Court which passed it wishes it to be executed in Calcutta, Madras, Bombay or Rangoon, such Court may send to the Court of Small Causes in Calcutta, Madras, Bombay or Rangoon, as the case may be, the copies and certificate mentioned in rule 6; and such Court of Small Causes shall thereupon execute the decree as if it had been passed by itself.

Small Cause Court.—This is the fifth or penultimate paragraph of sect. 223 of the former Code, the last paragraph being the following rule, and the remaining portion of the section being incorporated in sects. 38, 39, and 41, ante.

A Small Cause Court in executing the decree of another Court transferred to it, has the same powers as it possesses in regard to its own decrees.(3)

It was held that a Judge of a Small Cause Court, when duly invested with the powers of a Subordinate Judge, had in the exercise of such powers general jurisdiction.(4) But a doubt was expressed whether, under sect. 223 (d) of the former Code (corresponding with sect. 39, clause (d), ante), a Subordinate Judge could transfer a decree from his Court to that of a Small Cause Court when the property attached was within the limits of his local jurisdiction.(5) And a Mofussil Small Cause Court was required to adopt the machinery of the Mode of transfer.

5. Where the Court to which a decree is to be sent for execution is situate within the same district as the Court which passed such decree, such Court shall send the same directly to the former Court. But, where the Court to which the decree is to be sent for execution is situate in a different district, the Court which passed it shall send it to the District Court of the district in which the decree is to be executed.

"Directly."—Where both Courts are in the same District one Court may send to the other direct.(2) A District Court on receiving a decree transferred for execution can, under r. 8, direct any Subordinate Court to execute it. When, and in whatsoever manner, the decree has been transferred for execution to another Court, the holder of the decree must, under r. 10, make due application for execution to the latter Court.

Procedure where Court desires that its own decree shall be executed by another Court.

6. The Court sending a decree for execution shall send—

(a) a copy of the decree;

(b) a certificate setting forth that satisfaction of the decree has not been obtained by execution within the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed, or, where the decree has been executed in part, the extent to which satisfaction has been obtained and what part of the decree remains unexecuted; and

(c) a copy of any order for the execution of the decree, or, if no such order has been made, a certificate to that effect.

"Shall send."—Upon the maxim "omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta," an attachment will in the absence of evidence be deemed in this respect to have been correctly made.(3) The omission, however, to transmit to the Court executing the decree the certificate required by this rule is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the sale.(4) If any order is passed on receipt of the report of service

under r. 22 a copy of it should be sent.(1) The words in clause (c), "a copy of any order," etc., mean a copy of any subsisting order.(2) It has been held that the Court in sending the certificate is not called upon to consider whether the decree is still capable of execution; it has only to certify that a specified part of the decree remains unexecuted.(3)

Court receiving copies of decree, etc., to file same without proof.

7. The Court to which a decree is so sent shall cause such copies and certificates to be filed, without any further proof of the decree or order for execution, or of the copies thereof, unless the Court, for any special reasons to be recorded under the hand of the Judge, requires such proof. [s. 225.]

"Filed."—The filing of the copies and certificate is quite distinct from executing the decree, for which an application should be regularly made.

Inquiry into jurisdiction.—The former sect. 225 contained after the words "copies thereof" the following, "or of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it," thus recognizing the right of the executing Court to inquire into the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree.(4) These words, however, have now been omitted, as it was considered that another Court ought not to go into any question as to the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it.(5)

Sect. 38 enacts that a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution under the provisions contained in the Code. Sect. 39 provides that the Court which passed a decree (6) may, on certain conditions, send it, on the application of the decree-holder, for execution to another Court, and may of its own motion send it for execution to any Subordinate Court. There is no express provision as to whether the Court to which a decree may be so sent must be a Court having jurisdiction over the amount of the suit in which the decree was passed or whether the mere sending of the decree will confer jurisdiction on a Court for all the proceedings to be taken in its execution. On the ground, however, that sect. 6 limits jurisdiction and that the word "suits" in that section include proceedings taken to execute the decree, the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts hold that a Court which has no jurisdiction to try a suit can have no jurisdiction to execute a decree made in that suit.(7) So a Court has no jurisdiction to execute a decree sent to it for that purpose under sects. 38, 39, when the decree has been passed in a suit the value or subject-matter of which is in excess of the pecuniary limits of its ordinary jurisdiction.(1) The Madras,(2) and apparently the Punjab Chief Court,(3) held that the former sect. 223 gave an extraordinary jurisdiction to a Court to execute a decree in a suit beyond its jurisdiction sent to it for execution. This is on the ground that the pecuniary and other limitations in regard to regular suits are altogether absent in the sections relating to execution proceedings. See, however, notes to sects. 38, 39, et seq., ante. Where the subject-matter of a suit is within the jurisdiction of the Court, its jurisdiction continues, whatever may be the result of the suit, in all such matters in the suit as are within its cognizance, amongst which are matters in execution. The mere circumstance that the amount actually due under the decree by process of accumulation exceeds the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction does not oust it from the jurisdiction it has hitherto had over the suit.(4) An application for the transfer of a decree for execution is a matter within sect. 47, ante.(5)

"Transferred for execution."—Sect. 226 of the former Code, with which this rule corresponds, had after the words "subordinate Court" the words "which it directs to execute the same." Under that section it was held desirable that the District Judge's signature should appear on the order, but this is not required by the rule; and if the order is issued under his authority, the absence of his signature does not vitiate the proceeding.(6) It is only by an order passed by the District Court that any subordinate Court in that district is empowered to proceed.(7) Presumably an order for transfer is still to be made by the District Court. Where a decree was sent for execution to the Judge of G., who referred it to his Subordinate Judge; and that officer, finding that the land in dispute had been annexed to the district of S., transferred the same direct to the Judge of that district, who in turn referred it to his Subordinate Judge: held that the proceedings were regular.(8)

Oral application.

11. (1) Where a decree is for the payment of money the Court may, on the oral application of the decree-holder at the time of the passing of the decree, order immediate execution thereof by the arrest of the judgment-debtor, prior to the preparation of a warrant if he is within the precincts of the Court.

Written application.

(2) Save as otherwise provided by sub-rule (1), every application for the execution of a decree shall be in writing, signed and verified by the applicant or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case, and shall contain in a tabular form the following particulars, namely :—

(a) the number of the suit ;

(b) the names of the parties ;

(c) the date of the decree ;

(d) whether any appeal has been preferred from the decree ;

(e) whether any, and (if any) what, payment or other adjustment of the matter in controversy has been made between the parties subsequently to the decree ;

(f) whether any, and (if any) what, previous applications have been made for the execution of the decree, the dates of such applications and their results ;

(g) the amount with interest (if any) due upon the decree, or other relief granted thereby, together with particulars of any cross-decree, whether passed before or after the date of the decree sought to be executed ;

(h) the amount of the costs (if any) awarded ;

(i) the name of the person against whom execution of the decree is sought ; and

(j) the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required, whether—

(i) by the delivery of any property specifically decreed ;

(ii) by the attachment and sale, or by the sale without attachment, of any property ;

(iii) by the arrest and detention in prison of any person ;

(iv) by the appointment of a receiver ;

(v) otherwise, as the nature of the relief granted may require.

(2) may require the applicant to produce a certified copy of the decree.

Application for execution.—An application to execute a decree in part is informal.(1) Separate and successive applications for execution giving relief of different character may be made.(2) The Court is bound to allow execution at the instance of the recorded decree-holder.(3) The application must state the person against whom execution is sought.(4) The fact of a decree-holder giving a release to one or more of the judgment-debtors who were jointly and severally liable cannot prevent his proceeding against the others for the balance due.(5) The relief sought must be specified. A bare request that the decree may be realized without specification of the mode is insufficient.(6) If the application is in form, the Court proceeds to execution. If not, the Court should follow the course indicated by r. 17 (see notes to that rule).(7) The effect of defective and irregular applications has generally come into question, where it is alleged that execution of the decree is barred; a subject beyond the scope of this work.(8) Formerly it was held unnecessary to furnish a copy of the decree where application was made for execution to the Court which passed it.(9) If, however, a decree-holder obtained permission to execute the decree through another Court a copy of it was sent to that Court by the Court which passed it, and this was always supplied by the decree-holder, having been prepared at his expense. Now under sub-clause (3) the Court may require the production of a certified copy of the decree. An application for execution of a decree which is verified by the general attorney of the decree-holder, who has satisfied the execution Court that he is acquainted with the facts of the case, is properly verified within the meaning of this rule, notwithstanding that his principal may be residing within the jurisdiction of the Court.(10) As to adjustment, see r. 2, ante.

Immediate execution.—Ordinarily the application for execution is in writing. It is to be noted that under the former sect. 256 application for immediate execution could not issue simultaneously against both the person and property or against any property except moveable property (1) within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the particular Court. In the case of a warrant of arrest, this would only issue if the debtor was within the same limits. Moreover, the section only related to decrees not exceeding Rs. 1,000. The Legislature has now omitted this limitation imposed under the former Code on oral applications for immediate execution. As to exemption from arrest, see sect. 135.

12. Where an application is made for the attachment of any moveable property belonging to a judgment-debtor but not in his possession, the decree-holder shall annex to the application an inventory of the property to be attached, containing a reasonably accurate description of the same.

Not in judgment-debtor's possession.—This rule refers only to an application for the enforcement of a decree by attachment of moveable property belonging to the judgment-debtor (2) but not in his possession. Rules 12, 46, 51, prescribe the mode of attachment in such cases. Rules 43—45 deal with cases where the property is in the judgment-debtor's possession. The inventory must be delivered into Court along with the application for execution.(3) Under O. 39, r. 7, the Court has jurisdiction to make an order for preparation of an inventory.(4)

13. Where an application is made for the attachment of any immoveable property belonging to a judgment-debtor, it shall contain at the foot—

(a) a description of such property sufficient to identify the same and, in case such property can be identified by boundaries or numbers in a record of settlement or survey, a specification of such boundaries or numbers ; and

(b) a specification of the judgment-debtor's share or interest in such property to the best of the belief of the applicant, and so far as he has been able to ascertain the same.

Description.—Clause (a) has now been amended to expressly require boundaries and numbers to be given where such boundaries exist in a record of settlement or survey.(1) The Code has been passed to be observed and not to be treated as a dead letter as regards this or any other provision.(2) Still the Court will not press against a party a mere formal defect when the property which is sought to be attached can be identified (3) and in any case a defect of description can be remedied.(4)

Specification.—In case of a joint family the application should state whether it is the judgment-debtor's share or the joint family property which is sought to be attached. It should also specify the family property.(5) The former section which this rule replaces required that the description and specification should be verified in the manner of a plaint. This has, however, been omitted, as it was considered that a verification separate from that prescribed by r. 11, second sub-section, was not necessary. An omission to verify the inventory of property sought to be attached was held to be an irregularity only, not vitiating the application.(6)

14. Where an application is made for the attachment of any land which is registered in the office of the Collector, the Court may require the applicant to produce a certified extract from the register of such office, specifying the persons registered as proprietors of, or as possessing, any transferable interest in, the land or its revenue, or as liable to pay revenue for the land, and the shares of the registered proprietors. [s. 238.]

Power to require certified extract from collector's register in certain cases.

Extract from Collector's Register.—The sections which this and the last rule replace, as also sect. 213 of the Code of 1859, made it compulsory that the application should be accompanied by an extract. The rule has now been amended so as to give the Courts an option in requiring extracts, since these did not in all cases appear to be required but had the effect of adding to the expenses of legal proceedings. The rule is not restricted to land registered in the Collector's Office in the name of the judgment-debtor, for it frequently happens that the actual proprietors are not so registered.(1)

Application for execution by joint decree-holder.

15. (1) Where a decree has been passed jointly in favour of more persons than one, any one or more of such persons may, unless the decree imposes any condition to the contrary, apply for the execution of the whole decree for the benefit of them all, or, where any of them has died, for the benefit of the survivors and the legal representatives of the deceased.

(2) Where the Court sees sufficient cause for allowing the decree to be executed on an application made under this rule it shall make such order as it deems necessary for protecting the interests of the persons who have not joined in the application.

Joint decree-holders.—The decree-holders must be joint.(2) Ordinarily all the decree-holders in a joint decree must join in an application for execution.(3) This section in the last Code (4) allowed one or more to apply for execution of the whole decree unless execution is by the terms of the decree dependent upon a joint application.(5) The ruling of the Privy Council (6) negatives decisions to the effect that a joint decree-holder cannot apply for execution of a decree to the extent of his fractional interest.(7) This can be done, provided that the interest is one determined by the decree itself. This is, of course, a different thing from applying separately for execution limited to what the applicant considers his interest in it.(8) The words "or his or their representatives" have been omitted as this will be covered by the general clause. An order refusing to allow the decree to be executed by one joint decree-holder alone is not appealable.(1) In this case the contest was between two joint decree-holders, and it was sought to distinguish it on this ground from the Madras decision cited in which it was held an appeal would lie.(2)

"It shall make such order."—One of several decree-holders has no right to claim execution. Sufficient cause must be shown. The Court has a discretion, and before executing it should give notice to the other decree-holders and hear what they have to say; (3) notice, however, is not obligatory.(4) If made, the order ought in express terms to reserve the rights of the other decree-holders to share in the proceeds of execution, and, meanwhile, the interests of the non-applicants should be protected (5) either by taking security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit. The judgment-debtor may be compelled to pay into Court the whole amount due under the decree upon which the share of each decree-holder will be determined. The judgment-debtor cannot object to the share which one or more decree-holders may claim.(6) Under the Code of 1859, where the Court did not reserve the rights of the other decree-holders to share in the proceeds of execution, an appeal was entertained as to the distribution of the assets realized.(7) See ante.

16. Where a decree or, if a decree has been passed jointly [s. 232.]
in favour of two or more persons, the interest of any decree-holder in the decree is transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, the transferee may apply for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it; and the decree may be executed in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application were made by such decree-holder:

Application for execution by transferee of decree.

Provided that, where the decree, or such interest as aforesaid, has been transferred by assignment, notice of such application shall be given to the transferor and the judgment-debtor, and the decree shall not be executed until the Court has heard their objections (if any) to its execution:

Provided also that, where a decree for the payment of money against two or more persons has been transferred to one of them, it shall not be executed against the others.

"The interest of any decree-holder."—The additions are intended to remove any doubt (1) in regard to the power of the transferee of the interest of one out of several joint decree-holders to apply for execution. One of several decree-holders may assign his interest under the decree; and as regards joint decree-holders, see last rule. The transferee of a portion of a decree is a transferee of the decree within the meaning of this section.(2)

"Is transferred."—This excludes the owners of any interest in existence before decree. The section does not apply where the person seeking to execute is not a transferee from the original decree-holder; or to cases where the right to an equitable interest in a decree is contested; and was not intended to enable the Court to try such a question as the legitimacy of an heir.(3) And apparently if the decree-holder's interest in the property itself and not the decree be assigned the decree should be executed by the decree-holder.(4) The transferee of a decree stands in the same position for getting execution as the transferor.(5) If a decree is sold the purchaser as assignee of the decree is entitled to any mesne profits thereunder.(6) A decree for the payment of a sum of money and for costs of the suit is one and indivisible, and the decree so far as it may be only for costs cannot be separated from the rest of the decree and transferred.(7) As for transfer of rent decrees in Bengal (8) and of village Munsiffs in Madras,(9) see below.

"In writing."—An oral transfer is not recognized for the purposes of the rule.(10) Where S. obtained a decree against D, the owner in possession, and subsequently in a suit brought by J. against S. a decree was passed by consent that J. should execute S.'s decree, it was held that J. was a transferee within the section.(11)

"Operation of law."—The words "by operation of law" must be understood to mean the operation of law as administered in Indian Courts.(12) Where a minor succeeded to an estate, which up to the date it fell into his hands had been in possession of the executrix, it was held that there was a transfer by operation of law ; (1) as also where an order setting aside an adjudication passed the benefit under a decree from the Official Assignee to the applicant.(2) The holder of a certificate of administration under Reg. VIII. of 1827 is a transferee by law of a decree obtained by the deceased.(3)

"May apply."—Unless an application is made to it, all that the Court has to do is to look to the record. Unless, therefore, a decree-holder applies to the Court to certify a transfer of his interest, the Court can take no notice of such alleged transfer.(4) An application for the transmission of a decree has been treated as an application for execution under the former section, under which notice has issued to the assignee and judgment-debtor.(5) Mere notice and nothing else has been held not to operate as a revivor of the decree.(6) A decree is not a debt within the meaning of sect. 131 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the notice required by this rule is, on assignment, sufficient.(7)

"To the Court which passed it."—An application by the transferee of a decree for execution after substitution of his name can be entertained only by the Court which passed the decree.(8)

"May be executed."—It was formerly held that the transferee was not entitled to have execution as of right like the original decree-holder, for the matter was one within the Court's discretion ; (9) but that the discretion must be exercised reasonably. The mere fact of the existence of a cross-claim against the assignor of a decree by his judgment-debtor was no reason for refusing issue of execution on the application of the assignee.(10) Nor was the probability that the decree might be executed against some particular judgment-debtor sufficient ground for refusing a transfer.(11) If there was no dispute it might admit him, or if the dispute was one which it could decide it might try it, and upon the result of that trial admit the assignee to carry on the decree.(1) In this country an assignment can always be impeached by third parties who can show that it is not a real transaction.(2) A Court may refuse to recognize a benamidar as transferee, but it may allow execution to proceed at the instance of a person who is in fact such, if it thinks fit, and such proceeding, if in proper time, keeps the decree alive. The legality of the proceedings depends, not on the reality of the transfer, but on the sanction accorded.(3) If a decree is transferred to one as benamidar for the actual purchaser the latter is entitled to execute the decree, and his right course is to apply under this section.(4) If the application is sanctioned, then the transferee is placed in the same position as regards execution as the original decree-holder.(5) Under the present Code it has been held that this rule does not specifically lay down any restriction upon the assignment of a decree, and that the assignee's right of execution does not depend upon the discretion of the Court.(6) The rule makes no provision for the transferee's name being placed on the record, and though the actual substitution of the name of the assignee may not be necessary for the validity of the execution proceedings, yet ordinarily the assignee's name should be brought on the record.(7) Where the decree was transferred and the transfer admitted by the decree-holder in Court, the debtor could not, it was held, contest the right of the transferee to execute it, except on plea of payment to the original decree-holder.(8) Decisions under this rule are only summary for purposes of procedure, and are not decisive of the rights of persons claiming to be transferees, and where there is no appeal, a suit lies.(9) A transferee whose application to execute has been rejected can, if no appeal lies, bring a separate suit for a declaration that he is the person entitled to execute the decree,(10) or rather for a declaration as to the validity of the assignment, a declaration that the assignee is entitled to execute being, under this rule, a

Notice.—The penalty imposed by the proviso is that there should be no power to execute if the proviso is not complied with.(3) Where there are more transferors than one, all should be cited.(4) If a decree is transferred by assignment after the death of the judgment-debtor, notice may be served on his legal representative. The death of the judgment-debtor does not render the transferred decree incapable of execution.(5) As to the procedure in such a case, see case cited.(6) If a transfer is made after notice to transferor and debtor, and the decree partly executed, the representative of the judgment-debtor cannot subsequently object.(7) It is illegal (and not merely irregular) to execute the decree before hearing the objections.(8)

Money decrees.—This proviso applies only to decrees for money personally due by two or more persons; (9) and in cases coming within the proviso the assignee is left to a regular suit.(10)

Appeal.—Disputes as to share transferred arising between a judgment-debtor and decree-holder must be determined under sect. 47 by order of the Court executing the decree.(11) There is no express appeal given from an order on an application made under this section, but if the Court in disposing of the transferee's application is acting under and determines a question of the nature referred to in sect. 47, then an appeal lies. Upon this there is a conflict of decision. In some cases it has been held that no appeal lies against an order dismissing an application for execution by a transferee, either on the ground that as the Court had not recognized him and accepted him on the record as a representative, either such transferee did not become a representative within the meaning of sect. 47, or that the question as to whether such transferee should order is immediately granted to execute the decree. Sect. 245 of the last Code, which the rule replaces, provided that the Court should reject such applications or allow their amendment. This might be done then and there, or the application might be returned for amendment within a time fixed. If the application was not amended it was to be rejected, but if it was not rejected there was nothing to prevent the Court from extending the time for amendment.(1) If amended, the application was admitted, and the Court proceeded to order execution according to the nature of the application. The rule, in the first place, substitutes for the term "amended" the phrase the "defect to be remedied," because the first term does not cover the remedying of a defect, such as the omission to produce a copy as required by r. 11, third sub-section. As regards the subject-matter of the second sub-section of this rule it was originally (in order to meet various difficulties which were raised regarding defective applications) proposed to enact that until an application returned under this rule was presented with such amendments as the Court might have required, it should not be deemed to be in accordance with law. This was proposed in view of a decision of the Calcutta High Court.(2) The Select Committee, however, rejected this proposal and have relaxed the stringency of this rule, and have allowed the application to date back to the time of its original presentation on the lines followed in connection with plaints. It was proposed to enact that when once an application had been admitted it was to be deemed to be in accordance with law for the purpose of limitation, even though it was eventually dismissed after hearing the parties. On the other hand, to prevent dismissals for defect of form not affecting the merits, it was proposed to allow the Court, even after admission, to allow any amendment not converting an application into one of another and inconsistent character. The suggested additions, however, have not been made. Though under the previous Code, applications for execution were often allowed to be amended without objection as to the Court's competency to allow it,(3) it was a matter of doubt whether the Court had any power to amend after admission and registration.(4) In a recent case where, within a short time of the expiration of the period of limitation, a decree-holder applied under this rule for leave to file a list of immoveable properties, and his application was granted, but the list was not filed till after the period had expired, it was held that the proceedings in execution were barred by limitation.(5) the judgment-debtor can and ought to come in and ask that the attachment should be withdrawn from some particular portion of the property. Even if the order for attachment is wrong and excessive under this rule, the attachment as actually put is not without jurisdiction or null and void.(1)

Applicability.—The rule contemplates that where a decree is sought to be set off against another, the decree against which the set-off is asked for must be before the Court for execution.(1) A judgment-debtor is entitled to set off a decree whether the judgment-creditor may or may not intend to object on appeal to the judgment-debtor's decree, for a decree is a decree till it is reversed whether it be appealed or not.(2) Should either decree be reversed in appeal the decree of the Appellate Court can then be executed.(3) The rule does not preclude a claim of set-off of a sum due on a decree which is not under execution, the rule being inapplicable to such a case.(4) The transferee of a decree holds subject to equities enforceable against original holder (sect. 49). The purchaser of a decree against which a cross-decree may be set off, takes his decree subject to the set-off.(5) Where there were cross-decrees and one of the decree-holders was, by an order of Court, made with the consent of both parties, bound in executing his decree to set off the amount of the decree against him: held that it would be inequitable to allow the other decree-holder to obtain execution in full without setting off the amount decreed against him.(6) In the under-mentioned case a course was adopted which, if not strictly in accordance with the letter, was in accordance with the spirit of this and the next rule, and at all events should be allowed on principles of natural equity.(7)

"To a Court."—That is the Court to which the application is made for execution and which is dealing with the case as to whether execution shall be issued or not.(8) The former section contained the words, "produced to the Court." This would seem still to be necessary, as if all the decrees are not produced to the Court it will not have jurisdiction over them all.

"In separate suits."—The insertion of these words is intended to show that for the purposes of execution a counterclaim is not a separate action.(9) This rule deals with cross-decrees and not with cross-claims under one decree. That is provided for by the next rule.(10)

"For the payment of two sums of money."—A decree directing recovery of a certain sum of money by sale of land but not directing payment by the defendant was held to be for the payment of money.(1)

"Capable of execution."—So where a decree declared that it should not be executed until wasilat had been ascertained, and this had not yet been done, it was held that the decree was not in a position to be executed, and as it could not be executed it could not be set off against the other decree.(2) The Code of 1859 only applied to decrees of the same Court or decrees sent to one Court for execution.(3)

"Execution may be taken out."—Process should only issue for the difference. Where, however, process was allowed to issue for the smaller sum it was held that the irregularity did not render subsequent proceedings null and void, nor was it sufficient to justify the setting aside of a sale in execution.(4)

Assignee.—It was for some time a subject of controversy, whether in the case of decrees, both of which were in existence but not yet set off one against the other, upon the assignment of one of them the right to set off still subsisted as against the assignee. That question was finally decided in favour of the right to set off.(5)

Parties must be the same and the sum definite.—See as an illustration of this cases cited.(6) A strict adherence to the language of the section in the last Code was held to tend to simplify the rule, although it would contract its operation.(7) The fourth sub-clause, however, now makes it clear that the holder of a decree passed jointly and severally against several judgment-debtors, one of whom holds a decree passed against such decree-holder singly, may treat his joint decree as a cross-decree.(8) so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered upon the decree.

Cross-claims.—This rule proceeds on the same principle as the last, applying not where there are several decrees but one decree only. All that the decree-holder is entitled to enforce execution of is the difference between the amount found recoverable by him and the amount which the judgment-debtor is entitled to recover against him.(1) The rule is not limited in its application to cases in which the remedy of each party against the other is of precisely the same nature.(2) This rule does not apply to a case of pre-emption but only to counter-claims in suits for money; but the principle on which it is based is applicable, and under an order to deposit the purchase-money costs may be deducted.(3) 20. The provisions contained in rules 18 and 19 shall apply to decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge.

Cross-decrees and cross-claims in mortgage suits.

Mortgage suits.—This rule is new. It is inserted in order to make it clear that the provisions as to cross-decrees and cross-claims apply to the case of mortgage decrees.(4) The rule also incidentally makes it clear that the expression "decree for the payment of money" and other similar expressions in the Code do not include a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge.

Execution against person and property.—It is discretionary with the Court either to grant or to refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment-debtor. An appeal, however, has been held (5) to lie on the question whether this discretion was properly exercised.

the Court executing the decree shall issue a notice to the person against whom execution is applied for requiring him to show cause, on a date to be fixed, why the decree should not be executed against him:

Provided that no such notice shall be necessary in consequence of more than one year having elapsed between the date of the decree and the application for execution if the application is made within one year from the date of the last order against the party against whom execution is applied for, made on any previous application for execution, or in consequence of the application being made against the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, if upon a previous application for execution against the same person the Court has ordered execution to issue against him.

(2) Nothing in the foregoing sub-rule shall be deemed to preclude the Court from issuing any process in execution of a decree without issuing the notice thereby prescribed, if, for reasons to be recorded, it considers that the issue of such notice would cause unreasonable delay or would defeat the ends of justice.

Notice.—This rule is materially altered. Clauses (a) and (b) are the same as in the last Code. The Explanation to the corresponding section (248) of the last Code has been omitted and the second sub-section inserted, as it was represented that even in the cases referred to in clauses (a) and (b) issue of the notice may involve an unreasonable delay or defeat the ends of justice. The Courts have thus been given a discretion in the matter. Where a judgment-debtor appears and contests the decree-holder's right to execute his decree he cannot object that no notice was served on him.(1) The notice should be addressed to the widow of a deceased Hindu who held joint undivided property along with his brothers; for it must be as quasi separate property that the attaching creditor had a claim to it.(2) As to proof of service of notice, see below.(3) As to whether the issuing of notice acts as a revivor within the meaning of art. 180 of the Limitation Act,(4) and as to the time provided for by art. 179,(5) see cases cited. The judgment-creditor should ask for the execution of the decree and not for the issue of a notice, it being the duty of the Court to issue the notice.(6)

If neither party appears on the day on which the notice under this rule is made returnable the application for execution can be dismissed.(1) Under the last Code it was held that the issuing of notice was a condition precedent to the valid execution of a decree in cases falling within clauses (a) (2) and (b).(3) More recently, however, the Privy Council held that where the debtor and his estate were made properly subject to the decree, the fact that notice was given to the wrong person and sale took place without notice to the legal representative, though constituting a material irregularity, did not render the judicial sale a nullity.(4) Where a defendant-respondent dies before judgment in appeal is pronounced, it may be entered nunc pro tunc, and the decree may be executed under this and cognate sections against the heirs of the deceased without placing them on the record.(5) An application to set aside a decree on the ground that the notice had not been served under this rule must be made under sect. 47, and not under r. 90 of this order, and can only succeed on proof that the omission to serve the notice caused substantial injury to the owner of the property sold.(6)

"Court executing the decree."—It was held under the last Code that though the notice under sect. 248, corresponding with this rule, must be issued by the Court to which the decree was transferred for execution, the application to execute against a legal representative should be made to the Court which passed the decree.(7) But an omission to apply to the latter Court was held to be a mere irregularity.(8) It has been held under the present Code that a notice under this rule is not required to be issued upon an application for transfer of a decree, and that such notice must be issued by the Court which has seizin of the application for execution, whether it be the original Court which made the decree or the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution.(9)

Court why the decree should not be executed, the Court shall order the decree to be executed.

(2) Where such person offers any objection to the execution of the decree, the Court shall consider such objection and make such order as it thinks fit.

"Does not appear."—The person against whom a notice is issued under the last rule should appear and show cause if he has any valid ground of objection to execution against himself. For th Court may refuse relief where the applicant has contributed by his own conduct to his being placed in the position in which he finds himself.(1)

"Offers any objection."—When a petition of objection (which, it has been held, need not be verified (2)) is presented under this rule the Judge is bound, whether a day for hearing has been fixed or not, to fix a day for consideration of it; and (even if the petitioner is not present either personally or by a pleader) to consider those objections, and to pass such orders as may be just and proper: for it might be that the grounds of objection raised would be of such a nature as that the Judge might primâ facie, and without going further into the case, see reason for not proceeding with the execution.(3)

Process for execution.

Process for execution.

24. (1) When the preliminary measures (if any) required by the foregoing rules have been taken, the Court shall, unless it sees cause to the contrary, issue its process for the execution of the decree.

(2) Every such process shall bear date the day on which it is issued, and shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court and delivered to the proper officer to be executed.

(3) In every such process a day shall be specified on or before which it shall be executed.

Issue of Process.—This rule amalgamates with some alterations sects. 250 and 251 of the last Code, the first of which sections was amended by sect. 3 of Act VI. of 1886 by the introduction of the words "subject to the provisions of sect. 245 A and 245 B," which have been now omitted. Sects. 245 A and 245 B are now sect. 56 and r. 37 of this order respectively. Probably the words "subject," etc., were omitted as unnecessary, as this or any other provision of the Code must be subject to other provisions contained in it. For the word "warrant," the word "process" has been substituted, as being more exhaustive and familiar. It was pointed out under the last Code (4) that though in cases of the decree-holder's default the Court might, under sect. 250, suspend the issue of its warrant, that course, if adopted, would not have disposed of the application for execution which would still remain undisposed of in the register of pending cases. A distress warrant issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act, which has been extended beyond the original date of return, but does not bear on the face of it the altered date, is not a legal warrant under this rule.(1) See now as to default, r. 57, post.

It was held under the preceding section that a day had to be specified on or before which it was to be executed, and after that date no lawful order was in force.(2) If the process is not signed by the Judge or other officer it is bad.(3) The execution of the process may be delegated to another by the officer to whom it is addressed: the words "to be executed," seeming to imply that it was not intended that the "proper officer" should himself execute all warrants sent to him.(4) An officer cannot arrest without having the warrant in his possession.(5) As to proof of execution,(6) see below.

25. (1) The officer entrusted with the execution of the process shall endorse thereon the day on, and the manner in, which it was executed, and, if the latest day specified in the process for the return thereof has been exceeded, the reason of the delay, or, if it was not executed, the reason why it was not executed, and shall return the process with such endorsement to the Court. Endorsement on process.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 272. The Nazir can delegate the execution to a subordinate officer by endorsing his name on the warrant. If the endorsement is irregular it does not invalidate the arrest.(7) In a recent case in the Calcutta High Court it has been held that "the officer entrusted with the execution" within the meaning of this rule is not the Nazir

Stay of execution.

26. (1) The Court to which a decree has been sent for execution shall, upon sufficient cause being shown, stay the execution of such decree for a reasonable time, to enable the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court by which the decree was passed, or to any Court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution thereof, for an order to stay the execution, or for any other order relating to the decree or execution which might have been made by such Court of first instance or appellate Court if execution had been issued thereby, or if application for execution had been made thereto.

When Court may stay execution.

(2) Where the property or person of the judgment-debtor has been seized under an execution, the Court which issued the execution may order the restitution of such property or the discharge of such person pending the result of the application.

(3) Before making an order to stay execution or for the restitution of property or the discharge of the judgment-debtor, the Court may require such security from, or impose such conditions upon, the judgment-debtor as it thinks fit.

Power to require security from, or impose conditions upon, judgment-debtor.

Stay of execution.—Ordinarily a debtor once discharged after arrest cannot be re-arrested in execution of the same decree.(2) Under the former (as under the present) Code, execution was stayed on the application or objection of the judgment-debtor, to enable the latter to apply to the Court which passed the decree, or to a Court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or its execution. This is necessary both to prevent precipitate execution when the decree itself or some order passed in execution is still under appeal, and also because the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution had no jurisdiction to decide certain matters. It has been held that an applicant can exclude the period of stay (even if the order only relates to a part of the decree, as, for instance, recovery of costs) in computing the period of limitation.(3)

Security and conditions.—Where a condition precedent is infringed, execution must continue as a matter of course, whereas conditions subsequent may be enforced like decrees. It has been held that an order for security in stay of execution is not appealable ; for it is not an order determining the rights of the parties, and is neither an order within meaning of sect. 47 nor a decree within meaning of sect. 2.(1)

Liability of judgment-debtor discharged.

"Shall prevent."—The words "order of restitution" have been added to bring the rule in conformity with the wording of the second clause of r. 26. Ordinarily a debtor once discharged after arrest cannot be re-arrested in execution of the same decree.(2) It has, however, also been held, distinguishing the first, and dissenting from the second, of the cases cited, that though the Code specifically provides for retaking of the person under certain defined circumstances, it does not follow from this that a second arrest is in all circumstances forbidden.(3) In any case this rule creates a specific exception.

28. Any order of the Court by which the decree was passed, or of such Court of appeal as aforesaid, in relation to the execution of such decree, shall be binding upon the Court to which the decree was sent for execution. [s. 242

Order of Court which passed decree or of Appellate Court to be binding upon Court applied to.

"Binding."—The transfer of a decree to another Court for execution amounts to a qualified delegation of the powers possessed by the Court that passed the decree, in discharging its functions relating to the execution of that decree. Such delegation is, however, not complete, nor does it entirely divest the Court which transfers the decree of its powers and functions "in relation to the execution of such decree," for under r. 26 and the present rule the highest authority in some matters still rests with that Court notwithstanding the transfer ; (4) and the ordinary Court of appeal would still exercise its jurisdiction in respect of any order passed by the Court to which a decree was sent for execution. See sect. 42, ante.

29. Where a suit is pending in any Court against the holder of a decree of such Court, on the part of the person against whom the decree was passed, the Court may, on such terms as to security or otherwise, as it thinks fit, stay execution of the decree until the pending suit has been decided. Stay pending suit.—The provisions of this rule are limited to staying execution, and have no reference to a case in which execution has already been carried out and the decree-holder placed in possession of the property decreed to him.(1) It was held under the last Code that the section was not limited to a Court executing its own decree.(2) An appeal lies from an order staying execution.(3) The rule refers to the parties to the suits pending or about to be executed. Execution cannot be stayed on the ground that a stranger to the decree impeaches it on the ground of fraud. He should file a suit and obtain an injunction for the purpose.(4) An award filed in Court under sect. 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act is nothing more than an award, although it is enforceable as a decree, and execution of an award cannot be stayed under this rule.(5)

Mode of execution.

Decree for payment of money.

30. Every decree for the payment of money, including a decree for the payment of money as the alternative to some other relief, may be executed by the detention in the civil prison of the judgment-debtor or by the attachment and sale of his property, or by both.

Imprisonment.—This rule, as it appeared in sect. 254 of the Code of 1882, was a repetition of that in Act X. of 1877; the latter being the same as sect. 201 of Act VIII. of 1859, though differently expressed and amplifying the expression "decree be for money" in the earlier Code. In the Code of 1882 it commenced "Every decree or order directing a party to pay money as compensation, or costs, or as the alternative," and included the terms "enforced" and "imprisonment" for the present "executed" and "detention in the civil prison."

"For the payment."—A decree for rent, without charging any property, against a putnidar may be executed as a decree for money; (6) while a decree for maintenance payable monthly stands on the same footing as a decree by instalments and may be executed from time to time as the instalments fall due.(7)

"Alternative."—A decree for the delivery of moveable property shall state the amount of money to be paid as an alternative if delivery be not made.(8)

"Some other relief."—An order directing refund of money, awarded as compensation under the Land Acquisition Act and wrongly paid out, can be executed under this rule.(1) The Court executing a decree has no power to direct payment of interest on costs where the decree of the Privy Council is silent as to interest.(2)

"May be executed."—A Court should execute the decree in the manner applied for by the decree-holder,(3) but it has discretion to refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment-debtor,(4) and may in a suit for money call upon the latter to show cause why he should not be imprisoned.(5) A woman, however, cannot be arrested on a money decree.(6) As to costs of applications under this rule, see sect. 35.

"Detention in the civil prison."—The High Court's power to commit for contempt is unaffected by this Code.(7) An insolvent obtaining a protection order is not liable to imprisonment for arrears of maintenance included in his schedule.(8) A suit to recover damages on account of injuries caused by wrongful arrest can only be maintained if the original suit has been finally decided in favour of the plaintiff, if the arrest was made without reasonable or probable cause, and the injuries cannot be compensated by costs.(9)

Decree for specific moveable.—In the Code of 1859, sect. 200 included sects. 259 and 260 of Act XIV. of 1882. The words "or for any share in a specific moveable or for the recovery of a wife" and the second clause were added by Act X. of 1877. This clause was altered by Act XIV., and the words "and the decree-holder has applied to have the attached property sold" and "in cases where any amount has been fixed under sect. 208 such amount and in other cases," were also added and the last clause appended. In the present rule the italicized words "executed," "detention in the civil prison," and "by the decree to be paid as an alternative to delivery of moveable property," have been substituted for "enforced," "imprisonment," and "under sect. 208," appearing in sect. 259 of the Code of 1882, and the words "for the recovery of a wife," have been omitted, as there can be no such decree, a wife not being a chattel to be delivered over to the husband. Where any third person prevents the wife from returning to her husband, the latter may obtain an injunction against him, which may be enforced in case of disobedience either by the imprisonment of the defendant, or by the attachment of his property, or by both. This rule is not applicable where the property sought to be attached is not in the possession of the judgment-debtor.(1) A decree being given for specific immoveable and moveable properties and the Ameen directed to ascertain the extent of the moveables, an order was made in execution for the Ameen to give possession of such moveables as he could find, and to inquire into the nature, amount, and value of such as he could not find. On appeal it was held that this order was not one for alternative damages, but to enable the Court, if necessary, to make a sufficient and not excessive order for imprisonment or attachment of property in case of non-delivery.(2) A writ of attachment against the person of the judgment-debtor will not be granted without notice to him.(3)

Decree for specific performance, for restitution of conjugal rights, or for an injunction.

32. (1) Where the party against whom a decree for the specific performance of a contract, or for restitution of conjugal rights, or for an injunction, has been passed, has had an opportunity of obeying the decree and has wilfully failed to obey it, the decree may be enforced by his detention in the civil prison, or by the attachment of his property, or by both.

(2) Where the party against whom a decree for specific performance or for an injunction has been passed is a corporation, the decree may be enforced by the attachment of the property of the corporation or, with the leave of the Court, by the detention in the civil prison of the directors or other principal officers thereof, or by both attachment and detention.

(3) Where any attachment under sub-rule (1) or sub-rule (2) has remained in force for one year, if the judgment-debtor has not obeyed the decree and the decree-holder has applied to have the attached property sold, such property may be sold; and out of the proceeds the Court may award to the decree-holder such compensation as it thinks fit, and shall pay the balance (if any) to the judgment-debtor on his application.

(4) Where the judgment-debtor has obeyed the decree and paid all costs of executing the same which he is bound to pay, or where, at the end of one year from the date of the attachment, no application to have the property sold has been made, or if made has been refused, the attachment shall cease.

(5) Where a decree for the specific performance of a contract or for an injunction has not been obeyed, the Court may, in lieu of or in addition to all or any of the processes aforesaid, direct that the act required to be done may be done so far as practicable by the decree-holder or some other person appointed by the Court, at the cost of the judgment-debtor, and upon the act being done the expenses incurred may be ascertained in such manner as the Court may direct and may be recovered as if they were included in the decree.

Illustration.

A, a person of little substance, erects a building which renders uninhabitable a family mansion belonging to B. A, in spite of his detention in prison and the attachment of his property, declines to obey a decree obtained against him by B and directing him to remove the building. The Court is of opinion that no sum realizable by the sale of A's property would adequately compensate B for the depreciation in the value of his mansion. B may apply to the Court to remove the building and may recover the cost of such removal from A in the execution-proceedings.

Decree for specific performance.—Sect. 200 of Act VIII. of 1859 was divided up by Act X. of 1877 into two sections, 259 and 260. To the latter section the Code of 1877 added "or for restitution of conjugal rights;" altered "it shall be enforced" to "has had an opportunity of obeying the decree or injunction and has wilfully failed to obey it the decree may be enforced;" deleted from the earlier section the words "and keeping the same under attachment until further order of the Court;" and added the second clause. By the Code of 1882 were added the words "or abstention from" to the first clause, the words "and the decree-holder has applied to have the attached property sold" to the second clause, and the whole of the last clause. The portions in italics, as also the Illustration, were added by the present Code, which also substituted "an injunction has been passed" for "the performance of or abstention from any other particular act, has been made;" and "detention in the civil prison" for "imprisonment;" and in clause 3 "shall" for "may;" and in clause 4 "or if made has been refused" for "and granted." This section is inapplicable to Parsees as far as restitution of conjugal rights are concerned.(1)

"Restitution of conjugal rights."—These words were added to meet the objection raised in the case of Gatha Ram v. Moohita Kochin; (2) though sect. 200 of Act VIII. of 1859, as it stood, was held to cover such a case.(3) .A person directed by a decree to refrain from preventing her daughter returning to her husband, and who permitted her daughter to reside in her house, is not thereby guilty of such interference as would justify execution under that section.(4) The Court has now a discretion, under O. XXI. r. 33, in executing decrees for the restitution of conjugal rights. No provision is made for executing a decree for the recovery of a wife in this or the preceding rule, as no such decree can be made. Where any third person prevents the wife from returning to her husband, the latter may obtain an injunction against him which may be enforced in the manner provided by this rule.

"For an injunction."—A decree directing the removal of certain obstructions in a pathway can only be enforced as directed by this rule and not by directing the Court Ameen to remove the obstructions; (5) similarly in regard to a decree directing the removal of a building; (6) or one for removal of obstruction to light and air,(7) but see sub-clause (4) and the Illustration to this rule. Each breach of a perpetual injunction may be enforced under this rule.(8) A decree settling a scheme for the future management of a temple should be executed in accordance with this rule; (9) so where the decree directed certain property to be jointly managed by the plaintiff and defendant and both their names to appear in all papers connected with the same, on the defendant disobeying, the Court can direct attachment of his property.(10) A decree ordering delivery of certain moveables and declaring title to certain rights is not incapable of being executed under this rule as being merely a declaratory decree,(11) but a decree ordering that payment in kind accruing after the decree be from time to time given is too indefinite for execution.(12) An order for the refund of money, awarded under the Land Acquisition Act and wrongly paid out, should be executed under sect. 145 rather than under this rule.(13)

"An opportunity of obeying."—All a Court has to see is whether the party bound by the decree has had an opportunity of obeying the decree or injunction and has wilfully failed to obey it.(1) The proper course when an application is made to execute a decree for the removal of a building, is to serve notice upon the judgment-debtor calling upon him to comply within a time to be fixed by such notice, with the order in the decree, and on his failure to do so to make an order in terms of this rule ; (2) but that is not a general rule ; the rule does not require notice to issue, and it is discretionary with the Court.(1)

"May be enforced."—When an application was dismissed on the ground that the defendant had not been afforded an opportunity of obeying, a second application after such opportunity was not barred as res judicata.(3)

Limitation.—Failure to enforce prior breaches of a perpetual injunction will not bar the enforcement within three years of a subsequent breach. Art. 178, Sched. II., of the Limitation Act applies to such a case ; (4) Art. 179 is inapplicable.(5)

Discretion of Court in executing decrees for restitution of conjugal rights.

33. (1) Notwithstanding anything in rule 32, the Court, either at the time of passing a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights or at any time afterwards, may order that the decree shall not be executed by detention in prison.

(2) Where the Court has made an order under sub-rule (1), and the decree-holder is the wife, it may order that, in the event of the decree not being obeyed within such period as may be fixed in this behalf, the judgment-debtor shall make to the decree-holder such periodical payments as may be just, and, if it thinks fit, require that the judgment-debtor shall, to its satisfaction, secure to the decree-holder such periodical payments.

(3) The Court may from time to time vary or modify any order made under sub-rule (2) for the periodical payment of money, either by altering the times of payment or by increasing or diminishing the amount, or may temporarily suspend the same as to the whole or any part of the money so ordered to be paid, and again revive the same, either wholly or in part as it may think just.

attachment of the person or property of a recalcitrant judgment-debtor; but in England this mode of execution has been put an end to by the enactment of the Matrimonial Clauses Act, 1884, 47 & 48 Vict. c. 68 (cf. sects. 2–4). It has been considered that some relaxation of the provision in force in India is desirable, but that it was doubtful whether it should go as far as this. For the present Courts have been given a discretion in the matter, and they have been enabled to follow a procedure slightly adapted from the English practice in cases in which attachment and imprisonment appear inappropriate.

Decree for execution of document, or endorsement of negotiable instrument.

34. (1) Where a decree is for the execution of a document or for the endorsement of a negotiable instrument and the judgment-debtor neglects or refuses to obey the decree, the decree-holder may prepare a draft of the document or endorsement in accordance with the terms of the decree and deliver the same to the Court.

(2) The Court shall thereupon cause the draft to be served on the judgment-debtor together with a notice requiring his objections (if any) to be made within such time as the Court fixes in this behalf.

(3) Where the judgment-debtor objects to the draft, his objections shall be stated in writing within such time, and the Court shall make such order approving or altering the draft, as it thinks fit.

(4) The decree-holder shall deliver to the Court a copy of the draft with such alterations (if any) as the Court may have directed upon the proper stamp-paper if a stamp is required by the law for the time being in force; and the Judge or such officer as may be appointed in this behalf shall execute the document so delivered.

(5) The execution of a document or the endorsement of a negotiable instrument under this rule may be in the following form, namely:—

"C. D., Judge of the Court of (or as the case may be), for A. B., in a suit by E. F. against A. B.," and shall have the same effect as the execution of the document or the endorsement of the negotiable instrument by the party ordered to execute or endorse the same.

(6) The Court, or such officer as it may appoint in this behalf, shall cause the document to be registered if its registration is required by the law for the time being in force or the decree-holder desires to have it registered, and may make such order as it thinks fit as to the payment of the expenses of the registration.

Execution of instrument and endorsement.—Sub-rule (6) has been extended to cover optional as well as compulsory (1) registration, and an order for the payment of expenses of either kind may presumably be summarily enforced in the execution-department. The Registrar of the High Court can, if directed by that Court, execute a conveyance on behalf of a party refusing so to do, so as to pass his estate, but he cannot enter into a covenant on his behalf.(2) Objections to draft conveyances or draft endorsements can be made the subject of appeal under O. XLIII. r. 1 (e).

Decree for immoveable property.

35. (1) Where a decree is for the delivery of any immoveable property, possession thereof shall be delivered to the party to whom it has been adjudged, or to such person as he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf, and, if necessary, by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property. [s

(2) Where a decree is for the joint possession of immoveable property such possession shall be delivered by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property and proclaiming by beat of drum, or other customary mode, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree.

(3) Where possession of any building or enclosure is to be delivered and the person in possession, being bound by the decree, does not afford free access, the Court, through its officers, may, after giving reasonable warning and facility to any woman not appearing in public according to the customs of the country to withdraw, remove or open any lock or bolt or break open any door or do any other act necessary for putting the decree-holder in possession.

"Decree."—The decree should describe the land accurately so as to avoid any objection (3) in execution as regards the lands covered by it. Possession should not be given unless it is so ordered by the decree.(4) If the plaintiff is entitled to possession it should be given him. He cannot be compelled to accept compensation against his will.(5) When a decree is obtained for possession that decree should be executed and a second suit will not lie for the purpose.(6) Where an adverse title is unsuccessfully set up the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for khas possession under this rule ; (7) and having set up only an adverse title in the suit, the defendant cannot be allowed for the first time when the decree is being executed to plead his occupancy as a tenant.(1) As to growing crop, see below.(2) It was held that if the decree was silent as to a building situated on the land, it was not within the province of the executing Court to direct that the building be pulled down.(3)

Possession.—Possession may be actual or formal or, as it is often called, symbolical possession. The delivery of possession which is directed to be given by this rule is the placing of the decree-holder in actual possession, which act may involve the dispossession of some other. Whilst this rule relates to the delivery of what is known as khas, or immediate or direct possession, the following rule provides for the case where the immoveable property is in the occupancy of a tenant or of some other person entitled to occupy the same. Formal delivery of possession consists in the reading by the officers on the land of the order for putting the decree-holder in possession and taking a receipt from him. Whether what occurs on the occasion of giving delivery has the effect of dispossession is a question which must be decided on the evidence.(4) It has been held that the delivery of formal possession in execution of a decree for possession gives a cause of action against a defendant who remains in occupation of the possession which may be enforced in a regular suit.(5) Rules 97 and 98 provide for any resistance or obstruction to the delivery of possession complained of by the decree-holder, and r. 100 to any complaint on the part of a third party as to his being dispossessed in execution of the decree. Where in execution of a decree a person not a party to the suit is dispossessed, his dispossession does not give him a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the Mamlatdar. Rule 100 (formerly sect. 332) applies.(6)

Joint possession.—A plaintiff who is entitled to possession jointly with other persons can be granted a decree for joint-possession, whether he had been originally in joint-possession or not.(7)

"Bound by the decree."—This includes not only the judgment-debtor but persons taking from him and affected by the lis pendens. A person who purchases during the pendency of the suit is bound by the decree that may be made against the person from whom he derives title. So one who takes title or possession from a defendant in ejectment pending the suit is bound by the judgment, and can be evicted by the process which shall issue therein, although he is not a party thereto.(8) Lis pendens continues during the pendency of an appeal.(1) There has been some conflict whether the rule of lis pendens applies to a sale in execution. But the weight of authority appears to be in favour of the view that a purchaser at a sale in execution pending a suit is bound by the result in that suit.(2) Where sons living with their father had no independent juridical possession, the possession which was obtained through the Court against their father was held to operate as well against his dependents as against himself.(3) Decree-holders seeking to obtain khas possession of property which is already in possession of a surburakar under order of Court, should apply for his removal to the Court which appointed him in the matter of the suit in which he was appointed.(4)

Undivided share.—Difficulty was often felt (5) in executing a decree obtained by the proprietors of an undivided share in immoveable property for khas possession. The second sub-clause of this rule now regulates this matter. Thus where a decree-holder in execution of her decree purchased an undivided share in a house which the judgment-debtor owned jointly with a third person, and the judgment-debtor resisted her attempt to get possession, it was held that on the construction of this rule with r. 95 of this Order the decree-holder was entitled to have him removed from the premises.(6) be made by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property, and proclaiming to the occupant by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree in regard to the property.

Occupancy of tenant.—In order to a legal possession being given under this rule it is essential that all its requirements should be carried out.(1) But if the party in possession when the decree is being executed admits to the Court that the decree-holder has formally obtained possession, he cannot afterwards plead a title by adverse possession, denying that the decree-holder ever received possession.(2) "The substance of th. decree in regard to the property" which must be proclaimed to the occupant may or may not be a declaration that the decree-holder is the immediate landlord of the occupant, and as such entitled to receive rent directly from him, as there may be an intermediate holder. Probably both the intermediate tenant as well as the cultivating tenant or actual occupant would come within the terms of the rule.(3) In executing a decree under this rule the Court should confine its action strictly to the terms of the law, and should not add to the decree an order directing the ryots to pay rent to the decree-holder.(4)

Arrest and detention in the civil prison.

[s. 245B.] 37. (1) Notwithstanding anything in these rules, where an application is for the execution of a decree for the payment of money by the arrest and detention in the civil prison of a judgment-debtor who is liable to be arrested in pursuance of the application, the Court may, instead of issuing a warrant for his arrest, issue a notice calling upon him to appear before the Court on a day to be specified in the notice and show cause why he should not be committed to the civil prison.

Discretionary power to permit judgment-debtor to show cause against detention in prison.

(2) Where appearance is not made in obedience to the notice, the Court shall, if the decree-holder so requires, issue a warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor.

Discretionary power.—This rule was introduced into the Code by Act VI. of 1888. By the present Code the words "the payment of" have been added, and the words "detention in the civil prison" and "the civil prison" have been substituted for "imprisonment" and "jail in execution of the decree" respectively. This rule applies to cases under O. XXI. r. 11,(5) where, in respect of decrees for the payment of money, the Court may order immediate execution against the judgment-debtor on the oral application of the decree-holder.

"The Court may."—It has discretion to refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment-debtor.(1) It is the practice of the Calcutta High Court to issue notice to the party whose arrest is sought in execution in all cases. Even after a vesting order has been made the Court may under this rule direct execution by arrest and imprisonment where protection has been refused by the Insolvent Court.(2)

"Issue a notice."—Notice may issue against a judgment-debtor who in other execution proceedings has made an application to be declared an insolvent.(3)

Warrant for arrest to direct judgment-debtor to be brought up.

38. Every warrant for the arrest of a judgment-debtor shall direct the officer entrusted with its execution to bring him before the Court with all convenient speed, unless the amount which he has been ordered to pay, together with the interest thereon and the costs (if any) to which he is liable, be sooner paid.

Warrant for arrest of judgment-debtor.—Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 222. For form of warrant, see Schedule IV. No. 154, of former Code. The executing officer is only empowered to arrest the defendant and detain him for such a reasonable time as is sufficient to allow of his being brought before the Court, and having an opportunity of applying for his discharge; the detention of a defendant after such reasonable time and without further authority of law is illegal.(4) So where a sheriff's officer of his own motion took a prisoner, in custody under a warrant directed to the Superintendent of the Presidency Jail, to the Alipore Jail and delivered her there, it was held that the imprisonment was unlawful and that she was entitled to her discharge.(5)

Subsistence-allowance.

39. (1) No judgment-debtor shall be arrested in execution of a decree unless and until the decree-holder pays into Court such sum as the Judge thinks sufficient for the subsistence of the judgment-debtor from the time of his arrest until he can be brought before the Court.

(2) Where a judgment-debtor is committed to the civil prison in execution of a decree the Court shall fix for his subsistence such monthly allowance as he may be entitled to according to the scales fixed under section 57 or, where no such scales have been fixed, as it considers sufficient with reference to the class to which he belongs.

supplied by the party on whose application the judgment-debtor has been arrested by monthly payments in advance before the first day of each month.

(4) The first payment shall be made to the proper officer of the Court for such portion of the current month as remains unexpired before the judgment-debtor is committed to the civil prison, and the subsequent payments (if any) shall be made to the officer in charge of the civil prison.

(5) Sums disbursed by the decree-holder for the subsistence of the judgment-debtor in the civil prison shall be deemed to be costs in the suit:

Provided that the judgment-debtor shall not be detained in the civil prison or arrested on account of any sum so disbursed.

Subsistence money.—This rule amalgamates sects. 339 and 340 of the last Code, which correspond with sects. 276 and 279 of the Code of 1859, which, with the exception of the first paragraph of sect. 339, were somewhat similar.(1) An order by the Court for subsistence-allowance is necessary under the second clause, and the sum so fixed must be paid in advance (2) under the third clause. It is, of course, for the officer of the Court and not for the prisoner to see that the money is paid.(3) The judgment-debtor must be released on the omission by the person on whose application he has been detained to pay the subsistence-allowance. See sect. 58, clause (iv), ante.

Proceedings on appearance of judgment-debtor in obedience to notice or after arrest.

40. (1) Where a judgment-debtor appears before the Court in obedience to a notice issued under rule 37, or is brought before the Court after being arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money, and it appears to the Court that the judgment-debtor is unable from poverty or other sufficient cause to pay the amount of the decree or, if that amount is payable by instalments, the amount of any instalment thereof, the Court may, upon such terms (if any) as it thinks fit, make an order disallowing the application for his arrest and detention, or directing his release, as the case may be.

(2) Before making an order under sub-rule (1), the Court may take into consideration any allegation of the decree-holder touching any of the following matters namely:—

(3) In re Thomson, Bourke, 421 (1865).

(a) the decree being for a sum for which the judgment-debtor was bound in any fiduciary capacity to account;

(b) the transfer, concealment or removal by the judgment-debtor of any part of his property after the date of the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed, or the commission by him after that date of any other act of bad faith in relation to his property, with the object or effect of obstructing or delaying the decree-holder in the execution of the decree;

(c) any undue preference given by the judgment-debtor to any of his other creditors;

(d) refusal or neglect on the part of the judgment-debtor to pay the amount of the decree or some part thereof when he has, or since the date of the decree has had, the means of paying it;

(e) the likelihood of the judgment-debtor absconding or leaving the jurisdiction of the Court with the object or effect of obstructing or delaying the decree-holder in the execution of the decree.

(3) While any of the matters mentioned in sub-rule (2) are being considered, the Court may, in its discretion, order the judgment-debtor to be detained in the civil prison, or leave him in the custody of an officer of the Court, or release him on his furnishing security, to the satisfaction of the Court, for his appearance when required by the Court.

(4) A judgment-debtor released under this rule may be re-arrested.

(5) Where the Court does not make an order under sub-rule (1), it shall cause the judgment-debtor to be arrested if he has not already been arrested and, subject to the other provisions of this Code, commit him to the civil prison.

Proceedings on appearance of judgment-debtor.—Act VI. of 1888, sect. 4. The power to order the judgment-debtor's arrest is discretionary. The lunacy of a judgment-debtor is a good cause for disallowing an application for his arrest (1) If no cause is shown why the decree should not be executed, under this rule a Court is bound to cause the arrest of the judgment-debtor at once.(2) A judgment-debtor who had been arrested in execution of a decree of a District Munsif, made an application for his release under the former section, and his application was granted: held that an appeal lay against the order granting the application.(3)

"Moveable property."—Standing crops are not moveable property,(1) nor trees,(2) nor mango trees; (3) but fruit upon trees is moveable; (4) but as to the attachment of agricultural produce, see O. XXI. rr. 44 and 45. Tiled huts are immoveable,(5) so are machinery fixtures,(6) but stone sugar mills are not.(7) Thatch, especially when severed from a house, is moveable.(8)

"Actual seizure."—This, it has been held, may include such constructive seizure as is provided by O. XXI. r. 46,(9) or the affixing of the Court seal to the outer door of the warehouse containing the goods to be attached, without breaking open the door and gaining physical possession.(10) Under sect. 269 of the Code of 1882 the Local Government had power to make rules for the maintenance of attached live stock.

Under the corresponding section of the previous Code, rules were made for Bengal,(11) Assam,(12) Burma,(13) Central Provinces,(14) Bombay,(15) Madras,(16) Punjab,(17) and the N.W.P. and Oudh (18) in regard to the maintenance of attached live stock. This provision has now been omitted, presumably because the High Courts have now power under Part X. to make rules. The effect of this omission was recently considered by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, and though it was said that the point is not free from doubt, it was held that until rules were framed under this Code the rules made under sect. 269 of the last Code were in force, even though they might be inconsistent with this rule.(19) The new rules framed by the High Courts under this Code are collected in the Appendix.

Provisions as to agricultural produce under attachment.

45. (1) Where agricultural produce is attached, the Court shall make such arrangements for the custody thereof as it may deem sufficient and, for the purpose of enabling the Court to make such arrangements, every application for the attachment of a growing crop shall specify the time at which it is likely to be fit to be cut or gathered.

(2) Subject to such conditions as may be imposed by the Court in this behalf either in the order of attachment or in any subsequent order, the judgment-debtor may tend, cut, gather and store the produce and do any other act necessary for maturing or preserving it; and if the judgment-debtor fails to do all or any of such acts, the decree-holder may, with the permission of the Court, and subject to the like conditions, do all or any of them either by himself or by any person appointed by him in this behalf, and the costs incurred by the decree-holder shall be recoverable from the judgment-debtor as if they were included in, or formed part of, the decree.

(3) Agricultural produce attached as a growing crop shall not be deemed to have ceased to be under attachment or to require re-attachment merely because it has been severed from the soil.

(4) Where an order for the attachment of a growing crop has been made at a considerable time before the crop is likely to be fit to be cut or gathered, the Court may suspend the execution of the order for such time as it thinks fit, and may, in its discretion, make a further order prohibiting the removal of the crop pending the execution of the order of attachment.

(5) A growing crop which from its nature does not admit of being stored shall not be attached under this rule at any time less than twenty days before the time at which it is likely to be fit to be cut or gathered.

Agricultural produce.—See notes to sect. 61, ante.

46. (1) In the case of—

Attachment of debt, share and other property not in possession of judgment-debtor.

(a) a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument,

(b) a share in the capital of a corporation,

(c) other moveable property not in the possession of the judgment-debtor, except property deposited in, or in the custody of, any Court.

the attachment shall be made by a written order prohibiting,—

(i) in the case of the debt, the creditor from recovering the debt and the debtor from making payment thereof until the further order of the Court;

(ii) in the case of the share, the person in whose name the share may be standing from transferring the same or receiving any dividend thereon;

(iii) in the case of the other moveable property except as aforesaid, the person in possession of the same from giving it over to the judgment-debtor.

(2) A copy of such order shall be affixed on some conspicuous part of the court-house, and another copy shall be sent, in the case of the debt, to the debtor, in the case of the share, to the proper officer of the corporation, and, in the case of the other moveable property (except as aforesaid), to the person in possession of the same.

(3) A debtor prohibited under clause (i) of sub-rule (1) may pay the amount of his debt into Court, and such payment shall discharge him as effectually as payment to the party entitled to receive the same.

Debts, shares and other property not in possession.—This rule enacts in different language the provisions contained in sect. 236 and partly in sect. 239 of Act VIII. of 1859. The clause commencing "A debtor prohibited" was added by sect. 268 of Act X. of 1877. That Act also provided:—"No attachment under this section shall remain in force for more than six months; at the end of which time, if the judgment-debtor has not obeyed the decree, the property attached may be sold, and out of the proceeds the Court may award to the decree-holder such compensation as it thinks fit, and pay the balance, if any, to the judgment-debtor on his application." This provision was repealed by Act XIV. of 1882, which Act also added three clauses affecting the salary of a public officer or the servant of a Railway Company, and which matter is now dealt with by O. XXI. r. 48. The only other alteration made by the present Code is to substitute "a" for "any public Company or" and "affixed" for "fixed." The term "debt" has been used in this rule in its legal sense of a debt either due or accruing due; (1) that is, a sum of money which is either now payable or will become payable in the future by reason of a present obligation.(1) A sum payable upon a contingency does not become a debt till the contingency has happened.(2) An allowance payable as an annuity is not a debt, and cannot be attached under this rule until it has fallen due.(3)

A Provincial Small Cause Court cannot directly attach a debt due to the judgment-debtor payable outside its local jurisdiction.(4)

"Debt not secured by a negotiable instrument."—Includes a decree of a Revenue Court.(5) If a debt under a deed of hypothecation is intended to be sold alone or jointly with immoveable property in order to recover it by personal remedy, it should be attached under this rule; but where the interest under such a deed was attached under O. XXI. r. 54, the absence of an attachment under this rule did not affect the right of the purchaser to realize the amount due under it.(6) The rights and interests under his mortgage of a mortgagee out of possession should be attached under this rule and not under sect. 274 of the former Code and O. XXI. r. 54 of the present Code.(7) In a recent case in the Madras High Court, the effect of the words "debt not secured by a negotiable instrument" was considered, and it was held that they are undoubtedly wide enough to cover a debt secured by an hypothecation bond or a simple mortgage, and that r. 54 of this order is not applicable to such cases, though the General Clauses Act and Transfer of Property Act speak of such a debt as an interest in immoveable property.(8) The form of prohibitory order is given in the First Sched. App. E. No. 10. If such a debt be attached a claim may be preferred by a third party and investigated under O. XXI. r. 58.(9) The corresponding section in the Code of 1877 provided that an attachment under this rule could not remain in force more than six months, but the property could then be sold. Under such section it was held that bonds which would be barred in the mean time could not be made available for satisfaction of a decree in execution by the Small Cause Court.(10)

"Share in the capital."—The form of prohibitory order is given in the First Sched. App. E. No. 11.

"Other moveable property."—The form of prohibitory order is given in the First Sched. App. E. No. 5. Money deposited as security for performance of duties of servant may be attached under this rule, subject to the employer's lien, but cannot be sold or realized until the deposit is at the disposal of the judgment-debtor freed from the lien.(1)

"Not in the possession."—When the moveable property of the judgment-debtor is in the hands of a third party, the decree-holder must proceed under this rule. He cannot sue the third party,(2) but it would be otherwise if the decree declared the decree-holder entitled to the immoveable property.(3)

"The creditor from recovering."—An attachment under this rule does not prevent the debtor suing for the debt,(4) but he cannot realize it.(5)

"Copy of such order shall be affixed."—Non-compliance with this provision vitiates the attachment and makes it invalid as against a subsequent assignment.(6)

"May pay the amount of his debt into Court."—He cannot be ordered to pay or to show cause why he should not pay,(7) nor can he be ordered to pay into Court a debt he denies is due.(8) In Bombay, however, it has been held that clause (i) of this rule implies that the Court may make an order for payment of the debt which the garnishee is to obey, including an order for payment to the judgment-creditor.(9) Where, instead of paying into Court, the debtor paid the money to the only person who, had it been paid into Court, would have been entitled to withdraw it, and the payment was certified by the Court, it was held the payment amounted to a sufficient compliance with the former section.(10) Money paid into Court under the former section was held to be assets realized in execution under sect. 295 corresponding with sect. 73.(11) In the Calcutta High Court, after the attachment of a debt, an order can be made giving liberty to the debtor to pay the amount attached into Court, and appointing a Receiver to sue for and realize the debt if it be not paid in within a time to be fixed by the order. A voluntary payment by a debtor of his own choice and at his own risk made in a Court of inferior jurisdiction, with full knowledge of an attachment by a higher Court, was held not to discharge him.(12)

Effect of attachment.—An attaching creditor is not in the same position as an assignee for value without notice of a prior assignment, but stands in respect of prior assignments in no better position than his judgment-debtor.(13) An order for attachment gives the judgment-creditor certain rights in execution.

If such rights are not exercised before the presentation of a petition in insolvency they will not create a title so as to prevail against that of the Official Assignee under the vesting order.(1) Until a debtor receives a notice under this rule he is bound to pay his judgment-creditor, and it is no part of his duty to inquire whether his creditor is or is not entitled to receive the money.(2) The payment of a cheque given before notice of attachment cannot be stopped.(3) In England an order for attachment does not give the judgment-creditor a charge until it is served,(4) and there is no difference between the service of an order nisi and of an order absolute.(5)

Attachment of share in moveables.

47. Where the property to be attached consists of the share or interest of the judgment-debtor in moveable property belonging to him and another as co-owners, the attachment shall be made by a notice to the judgment-debtor prohibiting him from transferring the share or interest or charging it in any way.

48. (1) Where the property to be attached is the salary or allowances of a public officer or of a servant of a railway company or local authority, the Court, whether the judgment-debtor or the disbursing officer is or is not within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction, may order that the amount shall, subject to the provisions of section 60, be withheld from such salary or allowances either in one payment or by monthly instalments as the Court may direct; and, upon notice of the order to such officer as the Government may by notification in the Gazette of India or in the local official Gazette, as the case may be, appoint in this behalf, the officer or other person whose duty it is to disburse such salary or allowances shall withhold and remit to the Court the amount due under the order, or the monthly instalments, as the case may be.

company or local authority, as the case may be, while the judgment-debtor is within the local limits to which this Code for the time being extends and while he is beyond those limits if he is in receipt of any salary or allowances payable out of His Majesty's Indian revenues or the funds of a railway company carrying on business in any part of British India or local authority in British India; and the Government or the railway company or local authority, as the case may be, shall be liable for any sum paid in contravention of this rule.

Attachment of salary, etc.—In the Report upon the Bill it was pointed out that the provisions here enacted are not altogether a novelty in the history of execution. Officers of the Army serving in this country, whether they do or do not belong to the Indian forces, are public officers within the meaning of the Code. Under sect. 151 (3) of the Army Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58) such officers were liable to stoppage of one-half of their pay in execution of decrees, and such orders remained in force wherever the judgment-debtor was in India. When this provision was repealed as a sequel to the abolition of the Courts of Request, an addition was made to sect. 136 by the Army (Annual) Act, 1895, to legalize deductions authorized by any law passed by the Governor General of India in Council. This provision, in view of the definition of "public officer," placed military and civil officers on the same footing for the purposes of attachment under the Code of Civil Procedure. Owing to the comparatively more frequent and rapid transfers of military officers to places at a considerable distance, attention has been directed somewhat more pointedly to an inconvenience which, to a greater or smaller extent, is experienced in connection with the various branches of the public services in India. A public officer, whatever the amount of his indebtedness, remains, by virtue of statutory exemption, in enjoyment of one moiety of his salary, while his creditor, by reason of the application of the provisions relating to local jurisdiction, must follow him from Court to Court all over the country with troublesome and expensive applications for transfer and attachment. It has, moreover, been represented that a tradesman at a distance ought not to be burdened with responsibility for tracing out the actual officer disbursing the salary; and it is possible in practice for a public servant acting as his own paymaster to place the most serious obstructions in the way of execution. In these circumstances a reversion has been made, in substance, to the provisions of sect. 151, sub-sect. (3), of the Army Act, which have been extended to all public officers, railway servants, and servants of local authorities; and the responsibility is cast on the Government, or the company or authority concerned, for making its arrangements for receiving notice and for effecting the proper deduction. As a corollary to these provisions it is believed that the order may reasonably be declared effective, not merely while the judgment-debtor is in India, but while he is in receipt of emoluments from the Indian revenues, or from the funds of an Indian local authority, or of a Railway Company carrying on business in British India.

Salary or allowances.—This rule is new, though it partly includes the provisions in the last three clauses of sect. 268 of Act XIV. of 1882. There is no inconsistency between it and the explanation to sect. 64.(1)

"Within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction."—Under the earlier Codes, which contained no such provision as this, it was held that a Provincial Small Cause Court could not directly attach the salary of a public officer disbursed outside its jurisdiction; (2) nor that of a railway servant when not actually due disbursed outside such jurisdiction.(3) This rule provides a special rule in the case of certain judgment-debtors because r. 46 does not entitle the execution Court to attach a debt payable by a non-resident outside the jurisdiction.(4)

"May order that the amount shall . . . be withheld."—The order should also prohibit the public officer or servant from receiving the amount of the salary attached.(5)

Attachment of partnership property.

49. (1) Save as otherwise provided by this rule, property belonging to a partnership shall not be attached or sold in execution of a decree other than a decree passed against the firm or against the partners in the firm as such.

(2) The Court may, on the application of the holder of a decree against a partner, make an order charging the interest of such partner in the partnership property and profits with payment of the amount due under the decree, and may, by the same or a subsequent order, appoint a receiver of the share of such partner in the profits (whether already declared or accruing) and of any other money which may be coming to him in respect of the partnership, and direct accounts and inquiries and make an order for the sale of such interest or other orders as might have been directed or made if a charge had been made in favour of the decree-holder by such partner, or as the circumstances of the case may require.

(3) The other partner or partners shall be at liberty at any time to redeem the interest charged or, in the case of a sale being directed, to purchase the same.

(4) Every application for an order under sub-rule (2) shall be served on the judgment-debtor and on his partners or such of them as are within British India.

(5) Every application made by any partner of the judgment-debtor under sub-rule (3) shall be served on the decree-holder and on the judgment-debtor, and on such of the other partners as do not join in the application and as are within British India.

(6) Service under sub-rule (4) or sub-rule (5) shall be deemed to be service on all the partners, and all orders made on such applications shall be similarly served.

Partnership property.—This section has been introduced in consequence of representations that, for the protection of commercial enterprise, the rules relating to the attachment of any interest in partnership property should be assimilated to the English practice. It has been thought that, at any rate in the commercial centres, the time has arrived for introducing the provisions of sect. 23 of the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39); but how far they are likely to be useful when applied to the family business forming portion of the joint estate of Hindus is a matter which remains to be seen. The enactment in question has, therefore, been tentatively adapted, as sub-clauses (1) to (3), to which sub-clauses (4) and (5) embodying the simplified procedure directed by O. 46, rr. 1*a* and 1*b* of the Rules of the Supreme Court, are merely ancillary.

50. (1) Where a decree has been passed against a firm, execution may be granted—

Execution of decree against firm.

(a) against any property of the partnership;

(b) against any person who has appeared in his own name under rule 6 or rule 7 of Order XXX or who has admitted on the pleadings that he is, or who has been adjudged to be, a partner;

(c) against any person who has been individually served as a partner with the summons and has failed to appear:

Provided that nothing in this sub-rule shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the provisions of section 247 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

(2) Where the decree-holder claims to be entitled to cause the decree to be executed against any person other than such a person as is referred to in sub-rule (1), clauses (b) and (c), as being a partner in the firm, he may apply to the Court which passed the decree for leave, and where the liability is not disputed, such Court may grant such leave, or, where such liability is disputed, may order that the liability of such person be tried and determined in any manner in which any issue in a suit may be tried and determined.

(3) Where the liability of any person has been tried and determined under sub-rule (2), the order made thereon shall have the same force and be subject to the same conditions as to appeal or otherwise as if it were a decree.

(4) Save as against any property of the partnership, a decree against a firm shall not release, render liable or otherwise affect any partner therein unless he has been served with a summons to appear and answer.

Cross-references.—As to actions by or against partners in the name of the firm, see O. XXX. rr. 1–3, supra. Action against the person trading under an assumed or trading name, r. 10 of same Order. Actions between co-partners, execution not to issue without leave, O. XXX. r. 9. As to issue directed under this rule to try question of liability of retiring partners, see note (1).

"Where a decree has been passed against a firm."—Where a writ has been issued against a firm and served on a partner according to O. XXX. r. 3, supra, judgment must be signed against the firm. It cannot be signed against one partner separately for default of appearance.(2) But it has been held in England that where judgment has been recovered against the firm, the plaintiff is not confined to the remedy given by this rule but may still bring an action on the judgment against the individual members of the firm without any special leave of the Court.(3) A plaintiff having obtained judgment against a firm cannot by subsequent service of the writ render the person served liable as a partner hereunder. He must apply under this rule.(4)

Infant partner.—It has been held by the House of Lords,(5) (a) that an infant can be a partner in a firm; (b) that though a partner he cannot contract debts by trading, and is not therefore liable for the debts of the firm; (c) that the adult partner is entitled to insist that all the assets of the partnership shall be applied in payment of the liabilities of the partnership, and until this is done the infant partner has no claim on them; (d) that a judgment against a firm containing an infant partner, and bankruptcy proceedings based upon such judgment, must specifically exclude the infant partner.(6) The form of judgment in such a case, therefore, is in England as follows: "Adjudged that the plaintiff recover against the defendant firm, other than A.B. an infant partner," etc.(7) On a judgment so worded, execution issues as of course on the property of the firm, irrespective of the question of infancy of any member thereof; and, semble, even if the sole member of the firm were an infant, the right of the plaintiff to issue execution against the goods of the firm would not be affected. But no execution can issue against the private property of the infant partner. It would seem to follow from the above that an infant partner could not be served as a partner, though, semble, the firm might be served by service on him as the person in control of the business. It would seem also to follow that an infant partner can neither appear nor defend as a partner.(8)

"Execution may be granted."—See also O. XXX. rr. 6–8, supra, as to subsequent proceedings. No execution can issue against any partnership property except on a judgment against the firm. Where a partnership was dissolved as to A., and afterwards an action was instituted against the firm for a debt contracted before the dissolution, but A. was not served with the writ and had no notice of the action till after judgment, it was held that his liability must be determined before the judgment could be enforced against him, and a debtor's summons founded on the judgment was dismissed.(1) A partner so situated cannot now be made liable unless he has been served with the writ.(2) But where there had been a dissolution under an order by consent in the Chancery Division, and a receiver appointed of the partnership property, and subsequently a judgment in the King's Bench Division was recovered for a debt accruing due after dissolution, it was held that a charging order on the property of the firm in the hands of the receiver was valid, and could not be set aside by partners who had not been served with the writ.(3) Where the action is between a firm and one or more of its members, or between firms having one or more members in common, no execution can issue without an order.(4) Where a judgment is recovered by a firm suing in the firm name, and afterwards one of the partners dies, the surviving partner may issue execution by leave hereunder.(5)

"Against any property of the partnership."—As already stated, execution will not issue against any partnership property except on a judgment against the firm.

"Against any person who has appeared," etc.—As to effect of entry of appearance under O. XXX. rr. 6–8, see that rule, supra, and respective notes thereto, "They shall appear individually" and "Unless he is a partner of the firm sued." If in an action against a firm in the firm name, a partner who has appeared as such dies before judgment, his estate is not liable, except so far as it consists of property of the partnership.(6)

"Has failed to appear."—Where one person is trading as a firm, execution cannot in England issue against him under clause (c) of this rule, unless he has been individually served (either personally or by substituted service), or leave has been obtained under the rule.(7) As to a case where the writ is served first on the person in charge of the business of the firm and afterwards on a partner, see below.(8)

"Claims to be entitled to cause the decree to be executed."—This does not include a partner who has left the firm to the knowledge of the plaintiff before action brought. If he has been served with the writ as provided by O. XXX. r. 3, supra, he becomes liable under clause (b) or (c) of this rule. The proviso to that rule is imperative, and if he has not been served with the writ no order can be made against him hereunder.(9) Where the Master ordered an issue, "Whether the said S.M.H. was, or had held himself out to be, a partner," and the Judge varied the issue by limiting it to whether the person sought to be made liable was a partner at the time the cause of action arose, the C. A. reversed the Judge's order, and held that the issue directed by the Master was right.(1)

"Shall not release, render liable or otherwise affect."—These and the preceding and following words of the rule limit in England the operation of a judgment against a firm to (A) partnership property within the jurisdiction; (2) (B) the private property of any partner who was within the jurisdiction when the writ was issued and has become liable to execution under (a), (b), or (c) of this rule; (C) the private property within the jurisdiction of any partner who was out of the jurisdiction when the writ was issued, but who has become liable to the jurisdiction of the Court, 1st, by appearing to the writ, or 2ndly, by failing to appear after being duly served outside the jurisdiction, or having been served with the writ within the jurisdiction and having failed to appear. The present rule omits reference to jurisdiction in clause (a), and clause (1) has been simplified in the manner appearing.

The rule in England as regards joint contractors has been thus stated: (3) "An action and a judgment against some of several joint contractors is a bar to subsequent proceedings against the remainder of them on the same contract.(4) And this holds good when the joint contractors are partners in a firm (5) sued, not in the firm name, but as individuals. A judgment against a firm sued in the name of the firm is a judgment against all the partners in the firm.(6) And even where partners are sued together by their names and not in the name of the firm, judgment against one is no bar to continuance of the action against the others.(7) But a judgment entered by consent against one joint contractor, if pleaded, is a bar to further proceedings against others.(8) And it has been held that where one of two joint contractors gave a cheque for the amount of the joint debt, and was sued to judgment on the dishonoured cheque, the action and judgment were no bar to a subsequent action against the other joint contractor on the original contract.(9) Sect. 43 of the Contract Act alters the rule of English law, that all joint contractors must be sued jointly. The promisee may, in this country, sue any one or more of the joint promisors.(10) The applicability moreover of the principle of bar for jointness (11) in this country has been the subject of considerable discussion. It was considered applicable in the cases undermentioned.(1) The Allahabad High Court,(2) however, has held that the effect of sect. 43 of the Contract Act being to exclude the right of a joint contractor to be sued along with his co-contractors, the English rule is no longer applicable in India; at all events in the Mofussil. Since the passing of that Act a judgment obtained against some only of the joint contractors, and remaining unsatisfied, is no bar to a second suit on the contract against the other joint contractors.(3)

Unless summons has been served.—Partners carrying on business within the jurisdiction may be sued in the name of the firm (O. XXX. r. 1); service within the jurisdiction is to be deemed good service on the firm whether any members are out of the jurisdiction or not (ib. 2, 3).

Attachment of negotiable instruments.

51. Where the property is a negotiable instrument not deposited in a Court, nor in the custody of a public officer, the attachment shall be made by actual seizure, and the instrument shall be brought into Court and held subject to further orders of the Court.

Attachment of property in custody of Court or public officer.

52. Where the property to be attached is in the custody of any Court or public officer, the attachment shall be made by a notice to such Court or officer, requesting that such property, and any interest or dividend becoming payable thereon, may be held subject to the further orders of the Court from which the notice is issued:

Provided that, where such property is in the custody of a Court, any question of title or priority arising between the decree-holder and any other person, not being the judgment-debtor, claiming to be interested in such property by virtue of any assignment, attachment or otherwise, shall be determined by such Court.

Property in Court's custody.—This rule corresponds with sect. 237 of Act VIII. of 1859, save that in such section the property in deposit was described as property which "shall consist of money, or any security." It is similar to sect. 272 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882, save for the slight verbal alterations indicated in italics. The rule does not apply to a case where the property sought to be attached has, under the decree being executed, been declared the property of decree-holder.(1) The form of attachment is given in the First Sched. App. E. No. 7.

"Where the property."—This does not include the life interest of a beneficiary in a trust estate in the hands of the Official Trustee.(2)

"In the custody of."—This means actual custody,(3) and not in anticipation of property coming into custody.(4) If it be in the custody of a Receiver appointed by Court, sanction to attach must first be obtained from the Court, and will only be granted on such terms as would ensure equality between the creditors; (5) such an attachment without sanction will not be recognized.(6) Letters containing money addressed to the judgment-debtor can be attached in the hands of the Post Office.(7) The Official Trustee is a public officer.(8)

"Shall be made by a notice."—A Court has no discretion to refuse an application for attachment under this rule.(9) A notice sent to a Court is sufficient to make an effectual attachment of moveables in its hands even though the Court refuse to receive it.(10)

"May be held subject to the further orders."—A Collector in whose hands moneys are attached cannot pay away the same without orders of the attaching Court.(11)

"In the custody of a Court."—The second clause does not cover the custody of a Collector, and no determination of any question can be made.(12)

"Any question of title or priority."—Where one Court attaches and then makes an order directing another Court to pay certain moneys to A and before payment the amount is attached by B, the second Court has ceased to have a disposing power over the money, and cannot try any question of title or priority.(13) A and B obtained a decree against X and Y. Z obtained a decree against A and B for a lesser sum and attached the first decree, whereupon A and B paid the money into Court and alleged Z's decree was really that of X, it was held that, though such allegations had not been raised in Z's suit, it could be raised in execution and, on its being substantiated, that A and B were entitled to enforce for the purpose of satisfying their decree any claim that X could have done, and Z's claim to the money in Court was disallowed.(14)

XXI. rr. 58–63.(2) A suit, it has been held, lay to set aside an order made under the former section.(2)

Attachment of decrees.

53. (1) Where the property to be attached is a decree, either for the payment of money or for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge, the attachment shall be made,—

(a) if the decrees were passed by the same Court, then by order of such Court, and,

(b) if the decree sought to be attached was passed by another Court, then by the issue to such other Court of a notice by the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed, requesting such other Court to stay the execution of its decree unless and until—

(i) the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed cancels the notice, or

(ii) the holder of the decree sought to be executed or his judgment-debtor applies to the Court receiving such notice to execute its own decree.

(2) Where a Court makes an order under clause (a) of sub-rule (1), or receives an application under sub-head (ii) of clause (b) of the said sub-rule, it shall, on the application of the creditor who has attached the decree or his judgment-debtor, proceed to execute the attached decree and apply the net proceeds in satisfaction of the decree sought to be executed.

(3) The holder of a decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree of the nature specified in sub-rule (1) shall be deemed to be the representative of the holder of the attached decree and to be entitled to execute such attached decree in any manner lawful for the holder thereof.

(4) Where the property to be attached in the execution of a decree is a decree other than a decree of the nature referred to in sub-rule (1), the attachment shall be made, by a notice by the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed, to the holder of the decree sought to be attached, prohibiting him from transferring or charging the same in any way; and, where such decree has been passed by any other Court, also by sending to such other Court a notice to abstain from executing the decree sought to be attached until such notice is cancelled by the Court from which it was sent.

(5) The holder of a decree attached under this rule shall give the Court executing the decree such information and aid as may reasonably be required.

(6) On the application of the holder of a decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree, the Court making an order of attachment under this rule shall give notice of such order to the judgment-debtor bound by the decree attached; and no payment or adjustment of the attached decree made by the judgment-debtor in contravention of such order after receipt of notice thereof, either through the Court or otherwise, shall be recognized by any Court so long as the attachment remains in force.

Attachment of decrees.—This rule corresponds with sect. 273 of Acts X. of 1877 and XIV. of 1882, though the arrangement has been altered. The third and sixth clauses are new. The particular procedure by this rule in the previous Code was confined to money decrees. A money decree cannot be sold.(1) Under the Code of 1859, however, a decree for money could be sold.(2) A decree for dissolution of partnership can be regarded as a money decree and cannot be sold.(3) But a decree declaring a person entitled to recover possession of immoveable property with mesne profits is not a decree for money; (4) nor was a decree on a mortgage,(5) and it could be sold; (6) so also might a decree for redemption.(7) Under the present Code the procedure in regard to the attachment and realization of a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge is regulated by this rule.(8) This rule applies to cases of attachment before judgment.(9)

Clause (a).—Under the wording of the first clause of sect. 273 of Act X. of 1877, which ran, "If the property be a decree for money passed by the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed, the attachment shall be made by an order of the Court," etc., it was held that this also applied to cases where the decrees were passed by different Courts but were being executed by one Court.(10)

Clause (b). "Passed by another Court."—This does not include a decree for money passed by a Revenue Court.(1) The other Court on receiving the order is bound to comply therewith, and is debarred from proceeding with the execution unless the bar is removed in one of the ways specified in the section, and a sale notwithstanding the order attaching the decree is invalid.(2)

"Shall . . . proceed to execute."—The Court has no power after receipt of notice to sanction an adjustment; (3) nor can it return the notice to the Court which sent it as the amount for which the attachment was issued was not stated, and then proceed to execute its own decree. The Court on receiving the notice is bound to comply with it.(4)

Sub-rule (4).—This refers to decrees other than money decrees; (5) and under the previous Code, where the wording of this clause ran, "In the case of all other decrees," it was held to include decrees for redemption,(6) and decrees for sale of immoveable property under sect. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act.(7) The present rule, however, excludes decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge as well as decrees for the payment of money from the operation of this clause. When "the Court which passed the decree" attaches its own decree, it may execute such decree on the application of the attaching creditor.(8) In the previous Code this clause concluded with the words, "Every Court receiving such notice shall give effect to the same until it is so cancelled"; that is, to abstain from executing the decree. The Court receiving the notice cannot substitute in the record of the decree being attached the judgment-creditor for the judgment-debtor in the decree being executed.(9)

Attachment of immoveable property.

54. (1) Where the property is immoveable, the attachment shall be made by an order prohibiting the judgment-debtor from transferring or charging the property in any way, and all persons from taking any benefit from such transfer or charge.

part of the property and then upon a conspicuous part of the court-house, and also, where the property is land paying revenue to the Government, in the office of the Collector of the district in which the land is situate.

Mode of attachment of immoveable property.—The first clause of the present rule corresponds with sect. 235 of Act VIII. of 1859, the wording being practically the same. The present form was adopted by sect. 274 of Act X. of 1877, save that the words "taking any benefit from such transfer or charge" have been substituted for "receiving the same from him by purchase, gift, or otherwise." The remaining clause corresponds with portions of sect. 239 of Act VIII. of 1859. In that section the words were "the written order shall be read out." This was altered by sect. 274 of Act X. of 1877 to "the order shall be proclaimed," which Act added the words "by beat of drum or other customary mode" and "paying revenue to Government." Certain verbal alterations have been made as shown in italics.

"Where the property is immoveable."—Decrees for money charged on land are immoveable property.(1) A decree for redemption cannot be attached under this rule, but under O. XXI. r. 53.(2) A debt secured by mortgage of immoveable property should be attached under this rule and not under O. XXI. r. 46; (3) later cases have, however, held that such a debt, especially if the mortgagee is not in possession, is not immoveable property, and need not be attached under this rule; (4) at most omission to attach under this rule is an irregularity.(5)

It has been recently held that in the case of a purely usufructuary mortgage, where there is no debt payable by the mortgagor, the procedure should be by attachment (under this rule) of the interest in immoveable property.(6) An attachment is not necessary in execution of a mortgage decree, where the decree contains a direction for sale.(7) When this point was raised before the Privy Council they would not go into it, and held a sale, without attachment, in execution was good on the ground that the properties had been attached under a previous decree arising out of the same mortgage transaction.(8) The sale of a mortgage debt, in execution of a decree, carries with it the security without attaching the mortgaged property under this rule.(1) The equity of redemption of a mortgagor can be attached under this rule, the attachment being by order prohibiting the judgment-debtor from dealing with it in any way and all persons from receiving it, such order being proclaimed and notified as therein directed.(2) The execution of mortgage decrees are now governed by O. XXXIV., but prior to the present Code they were governed by the rules made under the Transfer of Property Act in Bengal and Assam.(3) The life interest of a Hindu widow under her husband's will in the income of his immoveable estate is immoveable property and is attachable.(4)

"By an order prohibiting."—This should be the procedure where the property sought to be attached is a factory in the possession of a prior mortgagee, and not by putting peons in possession.(5) The prohibitory order does not have the effect of dispossessing the judgment-debtor.(6) For form of prohibitory order, see the First Sched. App. E. No. 8.

"The property."—Where an attachment was made of the debtor's share without specifying the share, it was held only to cover the share and not the whole property.(7)

"Proclaimed."—Omission of the beat of drum was held to be a material irregularity, and the sale was cancelled.(8) Objections as to irregularities in the proclamation cannot be taken on appeal to the P.C. for the first time.(9)

But where property has been attached, an order dismissing an application for execution but not specifically withdrawing the attachment or declaring the decree incapable of execution, did not, it was held, raise the attachment. If on appeal such order were set aside the decree-holder was entitled to the full benefit of his attachment.(1) The striking off of execution proceedings from the file of a Court did not, it was held, interfere with the continuance of an attachment.(2) A sale in pursuance of an attachment being set aside does not displace the attachment; (3) nor does the death of the judgment-debtor,(4) even though he be a Mitakshara coparcener and his interest in the property attached passed to the surviving coparceners.(5) An attachment nine years old in execution of a decree twelve years old in the absence of other information must, it was held, be assumed to have been removed.(6) See, however, now as to striking off on default of prosecution of execution proceedings the notes to r. 57, post. "Decree-holders' default."—It was pointed out (1) that the last Code did not contain anything like a complete procedure for proceedings in execution. It did not suggest what procedure should be adopted in cases analogous to those which might occur during the hearing of a suit and which were provided for by Chapter XIII. of that Code. Further, it was clear, both from the Code itself and from the provisions of the Limitation Act, that the Legislature contemplated that there might be a succession of applications for execution.(2) Where final orders adjudicating upon the right to have execution have been made, the principle of res judicata is applicable (see sect. 11).(3) But under the former practice an application for execution might be made but might not be proceeded with. The Code did not prohibit an application for execution where a former application to that effect had been withdrawn without liberty to present a fresh one.(4) Nor, as stated, did it provide for cases where the application could not proceed for default of the decree-holder. In such cases a practice arose, with the object of disencumbering the files of the Court, of "striking off" applications. It was frequently pointed out that this practice was not justified by the Code,(5) and that there were (apart from the question of adjournment) only two ways of judicially disposing of any application, that is, by granting or dismissing it in whole or in part.(6) The effect of an order "striking off" was discussed in numerous cases. An attachment was not necessarily at an end because the execution-case was struck off the file. The effect of such an order depended on the circumstances of the case.(7) There was no general rule as to the effect of striking off an execution-case from the file.(8) Such an order did not necessarily put an end to the attachment, and it was competent for the Court to make such an order and at the same time continue the attachment.(9) It was open to the decree-holder to revive the execution-proceedings and continue it from the point where it had previously stopped.(10) Where by a mistake of the Court an application for execution against attached property was dismissed, but there was no order removing the attachment, and the decree-holder obtained a review, and the executing Court was directed to proceed, it was held that the attachment subsisted as against a sale made by the judgment-debtor previous to the review.(1)

The "striking-off" or shelving of an execution application thus admitted of different interpretations according to the circumstances. It might have the effect of killing the particular application without any adjudication on the merits. So if such an order was passed in consequence of some default of applicant not going to the merits of his right to have satisfaction of his decree (e.g. default in appearance; failure to pay process fees, or to put in copies of papers called for, etc.), in such cases though the order might put an end to the particular application in which it was passed, it did not bar a subsequent application for execution if it were made within the period of limitation.(2) Further, as sect. 158 of the Code of 1882 did not apply to execution-proceedings, there was no statutory provision for cases of decree-holder's default.(3) If, on the other hand, such an order was passed on the merits of the application, e.g. by a finding that the decree had been satisfied or that execution was barred by some previous order which would operate as res judicata, then so far as the Court executing the decree was concerned, the application was taken to have been finally disposed of in a manner adverse to applicant's right to have the decree executed, and no further application for execution could be entertained unless in pursuance of a successful appeal.(4) In these cases the effect of the order was to render the decree dead and incapable of execution or further execution.

that the Courts should have power to dispose of applications for execution when the parties fail to appear or when a party to whom time has been granted to do a particular act necessary to the progress of the application fails to do so.

This rule is apparently designed to cure this defect.

It was said in the statement of Objects and Reasons of the first Bill that the necessity for some definite procedure in these matters was generally admitted, and one of the principal objects of the draft suggested was to prevent delay and uncertainty by compelling creditors to put the Court in a position to proceed until their claims were satisfied and by prescribing more clearly what classes of orders operated as a bar to applications and objections. No doubt a decree-holder who has from time to time to trace and identify his judgment-debtor's property cannot be expected to prosecute the execution-proceedings with the regularity and continuity exigible in a suit. At the same time the former practice, by encouraging the decree-holder to drop successive applications without informing the Court, tended to throw proceedings into confusion and uncertainty and encumbered the files of the Court. It was, moreover, apprehended that the want of any inducement to press on the execution to a conclusion resulted in the practice of merely keeping alive the decree with the object of harassing the judgment-debtor by allowing interest and costs to accumulate.(1) It was therefore considered desirable (and with this view the first draft was prepared) to declare that execution-proceedings, once started, must be continuous and to impose penalties for default, but on the other hand to afford a decree-holder reasonable facilities for staying proceedings and having them removed from the file. With this object elaborate provisions were proposed in the original draft.

The Select Committee, while adopting in the main the principles of the draft, omitted some provisions and shortened or modified others. The original draft provided that unless the order of dismissal was set aside, the decree-holder should be precluded from proceeding further with the execution of the decree The Select Committee, however, considered that this was too severe a penalty for an error of procedure; and the rule was by them limited to the disability to preclusion from assistance of the same nature as that sought from the Court in the application dismissed for default. The original draft provided that dismissal on the merits should, unless such dismissal was reversed in appeal, be a bar to further execution. This was omitted, as the res judicata clause of the original Bill expressly extended to proceedings other than suits and thus dispensed with this provision. Though sect. 11 of the present Act has not been amended as proposed, the principle of res judicata is recognized to be applicable. See notes to sect. 11 on interlocutory orders and execution-proceedings. Where an application for execution is dismissed for default on the part of the decree-holder, the Court executing the decree may direct him to bear all costs incurred by him in the execution-proceedings.(2)

The provisions of these rules, if adopted, would have affected the previously existing practice with regard to "striking off" applications, and renewal of applications; and have met several deficiencies in the preceding Code and enacted a stricter procedure in matters of execution.

(1) See observations of Edge, C.J., in Dhonkal Singh v. Phakkar Singh, 15 A. 84, at pp. 90, 91 (1893).

(2) See Dhonkal Singh v. Phakkar Singh, 15 A. 84, at pp. 87, 91 (1893).

Under these rules the Court was required to proceed with execution if it was in a position to do so. If it was not in such a position by reason of the decree-holder's default, the Court might require him to put it in a position to proceed, and allow time for such purpose, and thereafter or at once dismiss the application. The effect of such an order, unless set aside, was that above stated. If, being in a position to proceed, it dismissed the application on the merits (in the sense stated), whether upon the judgment-debtor's objection or otherwise, any further application was barred unless the order of dismissal was set aside on appeal. Where an order for execution was made ex parte, the judgment-debtor might, on the analogy of decrees,(1) apply to set aside the order. In all these cases definite orders granting, dismissing or setting aside grants should have been made which would have had the effect stated.

Provision was finally made for withdrawal (but only with the leave of the Court) of the application. This leave was required in order to put an end to capricious and harassing withdrawals. The effect, however, of this "striking off" of the application from the list differed from what was held to be in many cases the effect of a similar order under the preceding Code. The attachment no longer existed, all processes in execution of the decree coming to an end. A fresh application for execution could subsequently be made unless it was barred by limitation. The provisions proposed by the Select Committee have not been adopted, and in their place has been substituted the present rule, which provides that if the Court does not adjourn the proceedings it shall dismiss the application upon which the attachment ceases. There is to be no "striking off" of applications. If the proceedings are not adjourned the application must be dismissed. There is no doubt that a dismissal after hearing on the merits is, unless reversed on appeal, a bar to further execution. The present rule does not state, however, whether a dismissal for default can, and if so on what grounds, be set aside, and whether if not set aside a fresh application for execution, if made within the period of limitation, is or is not barred. This provision does not apply to a case in which an order for attachment before judgment was obtained.(2) Revival of execution-proceedings will not revive the attachment so as to prejudice the rights of strangers who have in the interval acquired an interest in the property.(3) It is not open to the Courts to consider what the Judge or the parties intended. After the dismissal of an application under this rule, the attachment ceases, even if the Judge intended to continue it.(4) Default in this rule cannot be given a restricted meaning; but must have its ordinary meaning—failure to do what one is legally bound to do.

Investigation of claims and objections.

Investigation of claims to, and objections to attachment of, attached property.

58. (1) Where any claim is preferred to, or any objection is made to the attachment of, any property attached in execution of a decree on the ground that such property is not liable to such attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim or objection with the like power as regards the examination of the claimant or objector, and in all other respects, as if he was a party to the suit:

Provided that no such investigation shall be made where the Court considers that the claim or objection was designedly or unnecessarily delayed.

Postponement of sale.

(2) Where the property to which the claim or objection applies has been advertised for sale, the Court ordering the sale may postpone it pending the investigation of the claim or objection.

Evidence to be adduced by claimant.

59. The claimant or objector must adduce evidence to show that at the date of the attachment he had some interest in, or was possessed of, the property attached.

Release of property from attachment.

60. Where upon the said investigation the Court is satisfied that for the reason stated in the claim or objection such property was not, when attached, in the possession of the judgment-debtor or of some person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, or that, being in the possession of the judgment-debtor at such time, it was so in his possession, not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of or in trust for some other person, or partly on his own account and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall make an order releasing the property, wholly or to such extent as it thinks fit, from attachment.

Disallowance of claim to property attached.

61. Where the Court is satisfied that the property was, at the time it was attached, in the possession of the judgment-debtor as his own property and not on account of any other person, or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, the Court shall disallow the claim.

Continuance of attachment subject to claim of incumbrancer.

62. Where the Court is satisfied that the property is subject to a mortgage or charge in favour of some person not in possession, and thinks fit to continue the attachment, it may do so, subject to such mortgage or charge.

Saving of suits to establish right to attached property.

63. Where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.

Applicability.—R. 58 states that the investigation is to take place as if the claimant or objector "was a party to the suit." That is, it assumes that the claimant is not a party. Claims of third parties only are dealt with under that rule. This rule gives a statutory right of suit to the unsuccessful party in claim proceedings.(1) Questions between the parties to a suit are dealt with under sect. 47.(2) The cases just cited establish the principle, though as regards its application in the instances dealt with by them reference must now be made to the amendments made in sect. 244 of the last Code by sect. 47 of this. Where the case falls under sect. 47 there is an appeal, otherwise not. Where a judgment-debtor alleged that he was in possession of attached property only as Shebait of a deity it was held that the case did not fall within sect. 47.(3) A judgment-debtor who is not in fact a party to the claim proceedings does not in the eye of the Law become such by reason solely of his being the judgment-debtor.(4) These provisions apply only where the property sought to be sold has been attached in execution, but not where the decree has ordered its sale.(5)

The provisions of the Code are permissive. They do not impose an obligation on persons having claims to prefer to property attached to prefer them during execution and annex, in case of failure to do so, forfeiture of their right to establish their title to the property by a regular suit.(1) These provisions do not deprive a claimant of his remedy by suit but give him a more speedy and summary remedy.(2) If he avails himself of it the Court is bound in a proper case where the claim is made at a proper time, that is before sale,(3) to make an inquiry, and can be compelled by application in revision to do so.(4) His remedy by suit is also optional, and if he does not choose to avail himself of it, a sale will give him a fresh cause of action with a new period of limitation.(5)

These provisions were held not to apply to the case where a person served with a prohibitory order applies to have the attachment raised on the ground that the debt attached did not exist.(6) It has been held that the application of the Official Assignee to release the property of an insolvent debtor falls within these provisions.(7) If the debtor is declared insolvent and a receiver is appointed this does not prevent a person claiming.(8) It was held that sect. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act bars a claim under these provisions to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears due thereon, in all cases, and its operation is not confined merely to claims to the tenure or holding, but extends to claims based on the ground that the property claimed does not form part of the tenure or holding attached.(9) The word "suit" in sect. 55 of the Court of Wards Act includes miscellaneous proceedings, and therefore if a claim is preferred by the Manager of the Court of Wards without the sanction of the Court of Wards, the order disallowing the claim is not binding upon the Ward of Court.(10) As to whether the amendment of sect. 28 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act by Art. IV. of 1906 affects these provisions in relation to claims to tiled huts, see case cited.(11)

An objector may raise an objection to an attachment not only on the ground that he is in possession of the property attached, but also on the ground that he has an interest in it; and it has been held that where an executing Court disallows a claim under sect. 281 of the last Code (now represented by r. 61 of this Order) it has jurisdiction to do so, notwithstanding that it erroneously refrains from going into the question of possession and disallows the objection on some other ground.(1) Rules 58 and 60 of this Order speak of claims to attached property and the release of property from attachment; but they do not justify the conclusion that if moveable property of a perishable nature has been attached and a claim has been preferred to it, the claim must prove nugatory if the decree-holder can induce the Court to sell the property before the claim has been investigated.(2) The true aim of an attachment is to place the property in the custody of the Court so as to make it available for the realization of the decree. If by reason of the dismissal of the suit or the default of the decree-holder the Court dissolves the attachment, the property ceases to be in its custody. The Court cannot take it back into its custody so as to prejudice a title acquired in the interval (3)

Property.—The rules relate to claims preferred to and objections made to the attachment of "any property" attached. Sect. 266 of the last Code (now 60) specifies a debt as one species of property which is liable to attachment, and sect. 268 of that Code (now O. XXI. r. 46) prescribes the mode in which a debt is to be attached. Debts and other species of intangible property are therefore not excluded : (4) such as an equity of redemption.(5)

The word "property" as applied to land does not simply mean land, but the share or interest in land attached. It includes undivided shares in land. So where property belongs to two persons jointly, and in execution against one anything more than his right and interest in the property are attached; the other joint holder has a right to come in and claim that the attachment may be removed quoad his share.(6)

The section in the last Code was held inapplicable to claims to property directed to be sold by a mortgage decree,(7) and provision was made in sect. 282 of that Code (now r. 62) for the continuance of attachment subject to claim of incumbrancer. Though the execution of mortgage decrees is expressly incorporated in the Code, the Select Committee were of opinion that claims and objections arising out of the execution of such decrees should not be the subject of summary procedure under these rules, but should be determined in the ordinary course. This, however, does not imply that the procedure under the later rules as to resistance to possession or dispossession does not apply. A mortgagee who was in possession of the mortgaged property when it was attached in execution of a decree against the mortgagor, was held entitled to claim that the attachment should be withdrawn.(1) Where certain property was attached under sect. 13 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 before the petitioner was declared an insolvent, and a receiver appointed, it was held that under r. 58 the Court was bound to hear and adjudicate upon any claims preferred by persons alleging themselves to be the owners of such property.(2)

The Court.—As to jurisdiction (3) and Small Cause Court,(4) cf. cases cited.

"Shall proceed to investigate."—Under the Code of 1859 the Court was to investigate with the like powers as if the claimant had been originally made a defendant to the suit; words which were held to mean that the Court was to have the same powers of investigation as if the claimant was a party to a suit which would give it power to summon the claimant and to dispose of the case against him if he should refuse to attend.(5) Sect. 278 of the last Code did not provide expressly for the judgment-debtor being summoned,(6) but directed the Court to investigate with the like power as regards the examination of the claimant or objector, and in all other respects as if he were a party to the suit. R. 58 expressly provides that no investigation shall be made where the Court considered that the claim or objection was designedly or unnecessarily delayed. Where the order was that the plaintiff came in too late for inquiry,(7) or the property was simply released without inquiry,(8) there was held to be no order under the section. Before any claim can be investigated it is necessary to ascertain whether the claim was heard in a suit originating before or after the attachment made by the decree-holder.(9) Where there are several independent claims each must be heard separately.(10) The application ought either to be dismissed or numbered and registered as a suit.(11) In an investigation the Court has to determine the question of possession only, and cannot go into the question of title with respect to the property taken in attachment.(1) If the possession of the person holding the property is on his own account the fact that the judgment-debtor may have a beneficial interest or some title in it cannot be gone into.(2) The words "possession" and "possessed" in the last Code were held not to be used in a restricted sense as relating to mere tangible or physical possession, but to include constructive possession, or possession in law of debts and other intangible property.(3) The onus is on the applicant to prove his claim, and he must begin.(4) His evidence, which may be of any kind sufficient for the purpose (5) and must be received,(6) should be confined to his own claim and not to establish the right of a third party.(7) Where an objection has been made and disallowed it cannot be renewed by the same person in the same attachment.(8)

Order of Court.—Rules 60 and 61 specify the cases in which the Court is to allow or disallow a claim. R. 59 deals with the evidence to be adduced by the claimant, and it was held that to reconcile the sections the words "some interest" were to be taken to imply such an interest as would make the possession of the judgment-debtor possession not on his own account but on account of, or in trust for, the claimant. The rules relating to claims to attached property provide for a summary investigation into possession. The question of title is required to be gone into only so far as may be necessary to determine whether the person in possession was so as agent of, or as trustee for, another.(9) Sect. 280 of the last Code (now r. 60) was held to refer to cases in which the possession of a claimant as trustee was of such a character as to be really the possession of the debtor, and not to cases in which intricate questions of law might arise as to whether or not valid trusts might result in particular instances, the real question to be determined being that of possession.(10)

Under r. 60 the conditions upon which the property is to be in whole or in part released are: (a) that the property was not when attached in the possession of the judgment-debtor, or of some person in trust (1) for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him; or (b) that being in the possession of the judgment-debtor at such time it was so in his possession, not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of or in trust (2) for some other person or party (3) in his own account and partly on account of some other person. It is not necessary (to defeat the claim) to prove that the trust is one capable of enforcement by law.(4) The claim is disallowed under r. 61 if the property was in the possession of the judgment-debtor as his own or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of his tenant.

The Court has to "make an order for releasing the property wholly or to such an extent as it thinks fit from attachment." The order is passed after investigation of the claim of the objector.(5) It must be made before the sale has taken place, for upon the sale the application terminates ipso facto.(6) When the property of the insolvent judgment-debtor, which was attached, had vested in the Official Assignee during the pendency of claim proceedings, it was held that the latter was not a necessary party and that the decree ought only to declare that the property belonged to the judgment-debtor and not to declare it liable to attachment.(7) Where the claimant paid the amount of the decree and got the property released, the Court was held to have no jurisdiction to make an order for repayment.(8) Where the Court was, after such investigation, of opinion that the property attached ought not to be sold, the proper order was one simply releasing the property from attachment,(9) the order being one made with reference merely to the particular claimant who has obtained the order.(10) The rule contemplates not only the entire release of the property, but also the retention of the attachment to such extent as the Court thinks fit.(1) The person against whom an order is passed is the decree-holder.(2) It depends upon the facts of each case whether the judgment-debtor is a party against whom an order was made so as to be bound by the special rule of limitation prescribed for suits by such a party.(3)

Where, on the other hand, the claimant does not appear in support of his claim (4) or failed to adduce evidence (5) or evidence not worthy of credit,(6) and the Court is satisfied of the existence of the conditions mentioned in sect. 281 (now r. 61), the proper order to make is that the claim be disallowed. It has been, however, more recently in some cases held that these provisions contemplate an investigation of the merits of the claim, and that an order is not conclusive where the decree has been disallowed for default (7) or withdrawn.(8) An order of disallowance enures only to the benefit of the person in whose favour it was passed, that is, the attaching creditor.(9) Where the claimant was in actual possession the effect of an order disallowing his claim was held to be that he was in possession without title.(10) The effect of an order disallowing the claim is to give the auction-purchaser a title as against the claimant unless the claim is established by suit brought within the period of limitation from the date of the order.(11) Where intervenors claim a share of attached property, the Court should define the respective shares of the debtor and the intervenor, and sell the debtor's definite share only.(12) An order in favour of one of several decree-holders on an objection was held not to enure for the benefit of other decree-holders who were not parties to the proceedings.(1) An order for release being only provisional and liable to be set aside by a regular suit, has not the effect of putting an end to an attachment duly made.(2)

"May institute a suit."—A party to an investigation is excluded from any other remedy than that expressly provided for him by rule 63 by a regular suit brought within the period of limitation.(3) Where, however, a claim was rejected but the decree-holder withdrew his attachment, it was held that the parties were restored to the status quo ante, and the claimant was not required to bring a suit,(4) though a party may proceed to clear his title by suit even though the attachment has ceased to exist.(5) The special right of suit conferred is not controlled by the proviso to sect. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.(6) The right to be established in a suit instituted after an adverse order must be substantially the same right as that for which the party has contended in the execution,(7) and the suit should be determined by ascertaining the rights of the parties at the date of the order.(8) Where the same property is attached in execution of different decrees and all the attachments are removed, it is not necessary for each attaching creditor to bring a separate suit. A decree obtained in a suit brought by one enures to the benefit of all.(9) The right of suit is not a personal right confined to the original claimant, and therefore a suit will lie by the purchaser of the rights of a person who had unsuccessfully filed an objection.(10) The attachment constitutes the cause of action, and different purchasers of the attached property may be properly joined as defendants in the same suit.(11)

The decree-holder may sue to have his right to attach, and sell the property declared.(12) All that he has to prove is that on the date of the attachment the judgment-debtor had a subsisting right in the property, and the suit must be tried as if it were a suit for possession by the judgment-debtor.(13) The claimant may bring a declaratory suit to establish his right,(14) and to obtain any further relief to which he may be entitled,(1) and need not wait until his possession is actually disturbed,(2) and as long as a decree is operative, a temporary cessation of the execution proceedings under it does not deprive the execution creditor of his rights to sue to set aside the order.(3) There is nothing in these provisions which limits the plaintiff's right to compensation for his loss, or the defendant's responsibility for his wrongful act; and if the existence of the summary procedure leads to delay, and that delay to further loss, the consequences must fall upon the defendant.(4) It has been held that a suit by a claimant under sect. 283 of the last Code (now represented by this rule) should be decreed if it is found that the claimant was in possession after a purchase for valuable consideration, but that the defendant in such a suit can set up the defence of fraud annulling the transfer.(5) In a suit by a judgment-creditor to establish his debtor's title a claimant has no right to set up any irregularities there may be in the execution proceedings, a matter with which he is not concerned; (6) or to impeach the decree as collusive; (7) though this last decision has been dissented from on the ground that the section does not introduce an exception to the rule that a defendant is bound and entitled to set up every defence available to him.(8) When a person fails to establish a prescriptive title in a suit in which he is plaintiff, it does not follow that the defendant is entitled to recover the subject of such suit in an action brought by him.(9)

The suits though brought to establish rights negatived in execution proceedings are not appeals from orders, but substantive suits to all intents and purposes, and must be tried like any other suits subject to the ordinary rules of procedure and evidence.(10) The Judge is bound to find the facts upon the evidence rendered and taken in the suit, and not upon any evidence taken in the summary proceeding;(11) nor is the judgment in the claim case admissible.(12) Where a suit is brought by an intervenor the onus is on him to prove his title, and not on the purchaser to prove that of the judgment-debtor.(13) In a suit brought by the owner against the purchaser, the execution-creditor is properly made a party, the object being to restore all parties to the position which they occupied previously to such attachment and sale,(1) and if the claimant further desires relief by partition all the owners should be made parties.(2) As to the position of the debtor in a suit by the creditor, see ante.

Whether the suit is to be brought in the Ordinary or Small Cause Court depends upon the nature of the claim and the right sought to be enforced.(3) The judgment-debtor is not a necessary party.(4) Where an application was decreed with costs to be paid by the decree-holders, and the latter were declared in a subsequent suit to be entitled to sell the property, but no relief was asked in regard to the costs, it was held that they could not be refunded by the Court executing the decree.(5) The effect of a successful suit at the instance of an attaching creditor is to set aside the order of release and to restore the state of things which it had disturbed.(6) An application to revive a previous application for execution, which has been temporarily suspended by an order under these provisions, is, according to the Calcutta, Bombay, and Allahabad High Courts, governed by Art. 178 of the Limitation Act.(7) A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that the valuation of the subject-matter of the suit is the amount for which the attachment was made.(8) The Privy Council have recently determined that a suit under r. 63 falls within clause 1, Art. 17, Sched. II., Court Fees Act, and a Court fee of Rs. 10 is payable thereon.(9)

"The right which the plaintiff claims to the property in dispute," means the right which is claimed in the proceeding in respect of the property, that is, the right to have it sold or the right to have it released from attachment. They do not mean the right or title to the property. When, therefore, a claimant, being unsuccessful in a claim, has got the property released from attachment by coming to terms with the decree-holder, without notice to the judgment-debtors, a suit subsequently brought by him against the judgment-debtors for recovery of possession is not barred.(10)

"Subject to the result of such suit."—When property has been released from attachment and subsequently declared liable to attachment by a decree against which an appeal is pending, a sale of such property before the final result of the appeal is not illegal.(1)

"The order shall be conclusive."—Where an order has been passed unless a suit is brought, the unsuccessful party cannot assert his right in any capacity, whether as plaintiff or defendant,(2) and he is prevented from pleading adverse possession at the date of the order.(3) The conclusiveness exists only as regards the particular property in dispute.(4) The order is conclusive subject to the other provisions of the Code, such as those relating to review (5) and revision.(6) On the same principle matters finally heard and decided cannot be reopened on a second application; (7) but it has been held that where there is no investigation of a claim which is dismissed for default, a fresh claim may be made.(8) The discharge of the order of attachment cannot be properly asked for in such suit. The intervenor having established his title by declaratory decree, should then carry the decree to the Court by which the attachment was issued, when such Court, being bound to recognize the adjudication, will govern itself accordingly.(9) An order is not appealable.(10) An order passed by a Judge on the Original Side of the High Court dismissing a claim preferred by mortgagees of immoveable property which was attached in execution, was held subject to appeal under the Letters Patent.(11) case the Court, after being satisfied of the existence of the mortgage, sells onl the judgment-debtor's right of redemption, so that the purchaser does no acquire any greater rights than those of redeeming the mortgage. In the latte the Court decides nothing as to the existence of the mortgage. The purchase buys the property with notice of the mortgage, and subject to such risks a the notice might involve.(1) A person who purchases a property in executio of his own decree apparently subject to a mortgage lien as declared by th Court under r. 62, without, however, acquiescing in the order made in favou of the mortgagee, is entitled to question the mortgage, if done so within a yea of the order in the claim case, by way of defence in the suit brought against hin by the mortgagee to enforce his lien, although he may not have instituted an suit under r. 63 to establish the right which he claims in the property in dispute.(2

Sale generally.

Power to order property attached to be sold and proceeds to be paid to person entitled.

64. Any Court executing a decree may order that any pro perty attached by it and liable to sale, o such portion thereof as may seem necessary t satisfy the decree, shall be sold, and that th proceeds of such sale, or a sufficient por tion thereof, shall be paid to the party entitled under the decre to receive the same.

Order for sale.—This rule corresponds with sect. 242 of Act VIII. o 1859, but that section provided only for the sale of such attached property a did not consist of money or bank-notes. The present wording, save the word in italics, was introduced by sect. 284 of Act X. of 1877. The words in italic are additions made by the present Code. Where the same property is unde attachment by two Courts of different grades a sale effected by the Court o lower grade is not a nullity. Sect. 63, ante, is a directory section dealing wit procedure, and does not take away the jurisdiction to sell conferred on the Cour by this rule.(3) Sect. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act contemplates a certai state of things, but where such state does not exist that section does not exclud other ways of enforcing a decree, and a Court has general jurisdiction to direct sale, if not under that section, then under this rule.(4)

"May."—It is, however, imperative on the Court to act when an applica tion is duly made by a party interested and having the right to apply, but whe property has been sold in execution of a decree it cannot be sold again at th instance of another decree-holder who attached it prior to the attachment unde the decree under which it was sold.(5)

"Shall be sold."—When a sale takes place, all previous attachments effected upon the property sold fall to the ground.(2) As to payment of proceeds to party entitled, see case cited.(3)

Appeal.—An appeal lay under sect. 588 (j) of Act X. of 1877 from an order refusing the judgment-debtor's application that the property be sold in successive shares, the question being one between the parties in respect of the execution of a decree.(4) But see now O. XLII. r. 1.

65. Save as otherwise prescribed, every sale in execution of a decree shall be conducted by an officer of the Court or by such other person as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be made by public auction in manner prescribed.

Sales by whom conducted and how made.

Sales.—A sale in execution is a sale by the Court which has a statutory power conferred on it of transferring the interest of the judgment-debtor to the purchaser, and to that end a certain course of procedure is prescribed terminating with the sale-certificate.(5) As to sales of agricultural produce, see rr. 74, 75. In order that the sale be good it must have been held under a good decree,(6) and it must have been conducted by a person duly authorized. The words "whom the Court may appoint" in the former section were held to apply not only to the words "any other person," but also to the officers of the Court.(7) When a Court postponed a sale, but information not reaching the Nazir in time, he sold the property; it was held that the sale was void.(8) In sales under the direction of the Court it is incumbent on the Court to be scrupulous in the extreme and very careful to see that no taint or touch of fraud or deceit or misrepresentation is found in the conduct of its ministers.(9) Where a sale was conducted by two officers of the Court, one a chief clerk and officiating bailiff, and the other, his deputy, being the auctioneer, and the purchaser made a bid on the representation of the latter in the presence and hearing of the former that he was selling the land at the instance of the mortgagees, though a proclamation was read in English (which the purchaser did not understand) to the effect that only the interest of the judgment-debtor was being sold, it was held by the Privy Council that as the interest of the judgment-debtor was a mere equity to redeem property mortgaged far beyond its value, the Court could not enforce a bargain so illusory against a purchaser misled by its agents. And it was also held that the chief clerk was right in referring the matter to the Court for direction, and also in not proceeding under sect. 306 of the last Code (now represented by r. 84 of this Order).(1)

66. (1) Where any property is ordered to be sold by public auction in execution of a decree, the Court shall cause a proclamation of the intended sale to be made in the language of such Court.

Proclamation of sales by public auction.

(2) Such proclamation shall be drawn up after notice to the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor and shall state the time and place of sale, and specify as fairly and accurately as possible—

(d) the amount for the recovery of which the sale is ordered; and

(e) every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property.

(3) Every application for an order for sale under this rule shall be accompanied by a statement signed and verified in the manner hereinbefore prescribed for the signing and verification of pleadings and containing, so far as they are known to or can be ascertained by the person making the verification, the matters required by sub-rule (2) to be specified in the proclamation.

(4) For the purpose of ascertaining the matters to be specified in the proclamation, the Court may summon any person whom it thinks necessary to summon and may examine him in respect to any such matters and require him to produce any document in his possession or power relating thereto.

Proclamation.—It has been held that the object of issuing a proclamation is to give notice to intending purchasers of what is sold and not to the judgment-debtor.(2) The Court should be careful to specify in the proclamation the

It is necessary in such case to mention the date and hour of sale.(2) If this is done for a longer period than seven days a fresh proclamation (3) must issue unless the judgment-debtor waives it.(4) Where there is a series of short postponements less than seven days, which taken together in the aggregate amount to more than seven days, a fresh proclamation is necessary.(5) Another date should be fixed. Where a sale did not take place on the day fixed in the original notice, it was held that an indefinite postponement could not be regarded as an adjournment from day to day.(6) Proceedings mentioned in this rule have been held to be of an administrative and not judicial character. They are not therefore orders within sect. 47 (formerly 244) or appealable. But if a sale does take place objection may be taken on any of the grounds mentioned in r. 90 (formerly sect. 311), some of which may relate to the contents of the proclamation.(7) It has been said that the sales contemplated by the rule are sales in execution of decrees, and the procedure and the rules laid down regarding them are framed on the assumption that the property to be sold has been already attached.(1) It has been held therefore that property not attached and not proclaimed cannot be sold; (2) and where plaintiff attached before judgment and the suit was dismissed but decreed in appeal, it was held that a sale without further attachment was void.(3) It has, however, also been held that though the absence of attachment is an irregularity, a sale is not to be considered as a nullity merely by reason of the absence of any attachment.(4) Publication of a sale-proclamation upon the décree-holder's property at a distance of some half-mile from the judgment-debtor's property is a material irregularity in the publication of the sale.(5) The former section was held to have no application to a case in which property was being sold under a mortgage-decree in which a claimant objected that the property had previously been sold to him at a private sale.(6) An order of sale after attachment on a money-decree may create a valid charge on the property.(7)

"After notice."—The proclamation was in the Mofussil usually prepared without notice to the judgment-debtor and behind his back, and he was not therefore likely to receive any intimation of its contents until it was fixed up in the Court-house or Collectorate or was published upon the property. The faultiness of this practice was held therefore to excuse objection by the judgment-debtor.(8) The Code has therefore been altered to give effect to a practice followed in Calcutta with great advantage of drawing up the proclamation after notice to the parties, who are thus afforded an opportunity of settling the contents correctly, and in a great measure are restrained from subsequently raising obstructive and dilatory objections. If objections are not taken they may be deemed to have been waived.(9) The original Bill proceeding on the ground that the object of those proceedings was to give notice to intending purchasers rather than the judgment-debtor,(10) required a notification at the time of sale of any information coming after issue of the proclamation to the knowledge of the parties or of the Court executing the decree. And it was at first considered that as the rejections of a claim preferred, or an objection under rule 58, opened up the prospect of litigation, the intending purchaser should have notice of the matter.

The Select Committee, however, cancelled the proposed clause which provided for information likely to be useful to the public in bidding, and as above stated proposed to require the proclamation to be settled after notice to the parties.

"Time and place of sale."—Property cannot be sold before the expiry of the period mentioned in r. 68. The proclamation should fix a day for the sale which is not a holiday, or a day on which the Courts are closed by order of the High Court.(1) Both the proclamation of the time and place of sale and the holding of such sale at such time and place are conditions precedent to the sale being a sale under the Code.(2) It was held under the last Code that it was intended that a sale of moveable property should ordinarily be held in some place within the jurisdiction of the Court ordering the sale. Good and sufficient reason must be shown for directing otherwise.(3)

"The property to be sold."—The judgment-debtor has the right to have the property to be sold described with reasonable accuracy.(4) As this is to be expressly stated, where the proclamation set out particulars of the property, but subsequent to such proclamation a portion of the property was released to a third party, it was held that a fresh proclamation must be made.(5) If a Court directs the sale of property not warranted by the decree, the person aggrieved may follow the property in a regular suit.(6) In a recent case where decree-holders had applied for execution by attachment and sale of a certain encumbered share of a mahal, which was fully described in the Schedule, and the share was attached and sold, but the Subordinate Judge granted a certificate stating that a different and unencumbered share had been purchased, it was held by the Privy Council that there was no power to sell the latter share, since this was not a case of a mere misdescription but of a mistake as to identity.(7) The sale of a decree partly executed only enables the purchaser to execute what remains to be carried out.(8) In the under-mentioned case (9) it was held that the sale of a decree for possession of land did not carry the mesne profits to the debtor. An application to set aside a sheriff's sale or for compensation on the ground of deficiency in the area of land sold was refused.(10)

"Any incumbrance."—In the case of a mortgage the amount of the mortgage-debt unpaid should be stated.(3) An absence of the specification of the incumbrance may amount to a material irregularity avoiding the sale.(4) If a decree-holder knowing of the existence of an incumbrance does not notify it, the land passes free from it.(5) Semble, a third person purchasing mortgaged property bonâ fide at a sale in execution of a money-decree obtained by the mortgagee against the mortgagor obtains a good title free from the mortgagee's lien unless the sale is made subject to it.(6) Where the holder of two decrees attached property in execution of one of them, he was held to have a right to state in the notification of sale that he likewise claimed the same property in satisfaction of his second decree.(7) It was held that claims admitted by the parties or established by decree of Court should be entered in the proclamation as charges upon the property, though they came to the knowledge of the Court in an inquiry under this rule only, and have not been made the subject of an order under sect. 282 of the former Code. It was also held that mortgages noted in the proclamation as claims upon the property sold, should not necessarily be entered in the certificate of sale, or be computed as part of the purchase-money unless they had been admitted by the parties or established by decree, or unless they had been declared under that section to be charges on the property, and the Court has seen fit to sell it subject to them, but they should be so entered and computed if they have thus been admitted or established, or if they had been declared under that section and the sale was held subject to them.(8)

"Every other thing."—It has been held that the proclamation should specify as fairly and accurately as possible the value of the property, inasmuch as it was a material fact for the purchaser to know in judging of the nature and value of the property.(9) It was proposed to amend the rule to the effect that no valuation was to be entered in the proclamation. has not been adopted. If the property of which the sale is sought is a debt, and the Court receives notice from the alleged debtor that no debt exists, the Court should satisfy itself as to the existence or otherwise of the debt, and if it comes to the conclusion that no debt exists should abstain from proceeding to sale.(1) Should the Court have reason to believe that the property the sale of which was asked for was held by occupancy tenure, it is its duty to notify that fact in the proclamation as a warning to prospective bidders.(2)

"Every application," etc., sub-rule (3).—The Code has thus adopted a practice stated to have obtained in the Madras presidency,(3) under which the decree-holder is required to assist the Court by ascertaining and communicating the particulars to be specified in the proclamation of sale.

"For the purpose of ascertaining," sub-rule (4).—An objection raised in the course of an inquiry under this rule cannot be treated as a claim under r. 58 (formerly 278), the latter rule having reference to claims to and objections to attachment.(4) Where a person came forward in response to a notice issued under this rule, and claimed a mortgage-lien over the property, which was allowed and entered in the proclamation of sale, and the property was sold, it was held that the plaintiff (whose proper remedy was indicated) could not sue to have the sale set aside and a re-sale ordered of the property freed from the alleged incumbrance.(5) The enquiry under this rule should be of the most summary character.(6) An order by an executing Court under this rule, determining the valuation of immoveable properties attached and sought to be sold in execution of a decree is not appealable as a decree.(7)

Mode of making proclamation.

67. (1) Every proclamation shall be made and published as nearly as may be, in the manner prescribed by rule 54, sub-rule (2).

(2) Where the Court so directs, such proclamation shall also be published in the local official Gazette, or in a local newspaper, or in both, and the costs of such publication shall be deemed to be costs of the sale.

(3) Where property is divided into lots for the purpose of being sold separately, it shall not be necessary to make a separate proclamation for each lot, unless proper notice of the sale cannot, in the opinion of the Court, otherwise be given.

"Shall be made."—See notes to last rule and to r. 5, and as to fixing in Court House note.(1) The words "as nearly as may be" have been inserted because the provision applies generally to sales of both kinds of property, and in the case of moveables the provisions of r. 5 relating to immoveables cannot be applied in their entirety. An omission to carry out the provision of this rule is an irregularity, but does not render a sale void.(2)

Advertisement.—It is right that the Court should permit any advertisement reasonably required which might have the effect of giving notice to all possible purchasers.(3) The power of advertisement is now still further extended, and an option is given not to publish in the Gazette, which is not commonly read by the classes most affected. The costs are as under the last Code costs in the sale.(4) A want of correspondence between the advertisement and the schedule of the proclamation is an irregularity which might need to be set right by the Court if the sale was otherwise regular.(5)

"Lots."—The substance of the decision (6) on the subject of the division of a joint area into lots has been incorporated. It had been previously held, prior to the amendment of the last Code by sect. 29 of Act VII. of 1888, that where several separate properties are attached there must be a separate proclamation.(7)

Time of sale.

68. Save in the case of property of the kind described in the proviso to rule 43, no sale *here*under shall, without the consent in writing of the judgment-debtor, take place until after the expiration of at least thirty days in the case of immoveable property, and of at least fifteen days in the case of moveable property, calculated from the date on which the copy of the proclamation has been affixed on the court-house of the Judge ordering the sale.

"Consent."—An application made on the day of sale by the judgment-debtor that a part only of the property should be sold, instead of the entirety, is not a consent under this rule.(8)

Sale in contravention of rule.—There has been a difference of opinion on the question whether contravention of the provisions of the section (290) which this rule replaces, is an illegality vitiating the sale,(9) or as is the case a mere irregularity,(1) which did not avoid the sale in the absence of proof of substantial injury.

Adjournment or stoppage of sale.

69. (1) The Court may, in its discretion, adjourn any sale hereunder to a specified day and hour, and the officer conducting any such sale may in his discretion adjourn the sale, recording his reasons for such adjournment:

Provided that, where the sale is made in, or within the precincts of, the court-house, no such adjournment shall be made without the leave of the Court.

(2) Where a sale is adjourned under sub-rule (1) for a longer period than seven days, a fresh proclamation under rule 67 shall be made, unless the judgment-debtor consents to waive it.

(3) Every sale shall be stopped if, before the lot is knocked down, the debt and costs (including the costs of the sale) are tendered to the officer conducting the sale, or proof is given to his satisfaction that the amount of such debt and costs has been paid into the Court which ordered the sale.

"The Court."—That is the Court executing the decree. A Judge cannot order a Subordinate Judge to postpone a sale in a case pending before the Court of the latter officer.(2)

Adjournment.—This is a matter of discretion. Whether it should be granted must be determined upon the particular facts, and precedents (3) are not profitable. The Court must consider not only the interests of the judgment-debtor, but also the possibility of prejudice to the decree-holder. When, however, a sale is adjourned, the provisions of the rule should be followed with exactitude.(4) See notes to r. 66, ante, "Proclamation." It is the practice to place all properties intended for sale on a list, and to proceed with the sales from day to day, commencing on an appointed day. As each property is taken up in its turn, an adjournment of the sale of a particular property which is the consequence of such procedure is not an adjournment within the meaning of this rule.(1)

"Any sale."—The rule applies to mortgage-sales.(2)

"Specified day and hour."—See notes to r. 66, "Proclamation." Assuming that a fresh proclamation is necessary, an omission to issue it is only an irregularity, and if it involved no loss to the judgment-debtor, it cannot be set aside. Thus where a sale was postponed and a fresh proclamation was issued directing it to be held on a certain date, but owing to the absence of the presiding officer on that date it took place some days later, the Privy Council held that it was not in contravention of sects. 289 and 291 of the last Code (now represented by rules 66 and 69 of this Order) and that even if there had been any irregularity in it, it could not be set aside in the absence of substantial injury.(3) In such case the judgment-debtor should object to the confirmation of sale and not seek to impeach it by suit.(4)

"Knocked down."—A bid may be withdrawn until the lot is knocked down.(5)

Payment.—An assignee after decree in a mortgage-suit is entitled to deposit, and where this was refused and the judgment-creditor bought himself, the sale was set aside.(6) A payment made to prevent a sale is not a voluntary payment, whether made by the debtor or a third party claiming the property.(7) defaul*ting purchaser* under the provisions relating to the execution of a decree for the payment of money.

"Purchaser's default."—Sect. 254 of Act VIII. of 1859, so far as it relates to the subject-matter of the present rule, ran, "If the proceeds of the sale which is eventually consummated be less than the price bid by such defaulting purchaser the difference shall be leviable from him under the rules for enforcing the payment of money in satisfaction of a decree of Court." The present wording was adopted by sect. 293 of Act X. of 1877, save as indicated in italics. Of the alterations so indicated the only important ones are the addition of the words "or to the Collector or subordinate of the Collector, as the case may be," and "or other person" which were made by the present Code.

The rule applies to re-sales in consequence of default in payment of deposit under O. XXI. r. 84, or in payment of purchase-money under O. XXI. r. 85 and O. XXI. r. 86; (1) and under O. XXI. r. 77; (2) and whether the property be moveable or immoveable: (3) even when the property is re-sold forthwith, owing to the judgment-creditor repudiating the bid of his agent; (4) also where the purchaser refuses to pay the purchase-money owing to the same property being sold the next day in execution of a decree of another party who had a previous lien on the property; (5) but the re-sale must be of the same property as first sold and under the same description, and any substantial difference in matters required by O. XXI. r. 66, disentitles the decree-holder to recover any deficiency of price.(6) It does not apply to a case where the purchaser makes default and a re-sale is ordered but does not take place owing to the property being sold in execution of another decree at the instance of another judgment-creditor at a lower price.(7)

"Any deficiency of price."—Does not include interest on the price.(8)

"Shall be certified."—The absence of a certificate will not prevent the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor from recovering the deficiency from the defaulter.(9)

"At the instance of either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor."—The judgment-debtor is not bound to proceed under this rule, and it does not debar him from having the re-sale set aside on the ground of irregularity; (10) nor does it debar the judgment-creditor from proceeding upon his decree against any other property of the judgment-debtor than that originally sold.(1) He has not to wait till the deficiency is realized ; (2) nor can the amount bid at the first sale be deducted from the decretal claim ; (3) but the Calcutta High Court held that the judgment-debtor was entitled to credit for the full amount bid at the first sale.(4)

"Defaulting purchaser."—The principal and not the agent bidding at the sale is liable, and recourse should be had against the principal, and on his proving his repudiation, the agent can be proceeded against on breach of contract or for a false representation.(5)

Suit.—A suit will lie to set aside an order under this rule.(6)

Appeal.—An appeal, it was held, lay from an order rejecting a petition to recover from a defaulter who was the judgment-creditor ; (7) and even where the defaulter was not a party to the suit.(8) The Allahabad High Court, however, held that no appeal lay ; (9) while the Calcutta High Court held that both an appeal and a second appeal lay from an order directing a defaulter to make good the deficiency.(10)

72. (1) No holder of a decree in execution of which property is sold shall, without the express permission of the Court, bid for or purchase the property.

Decree-holder not to bid for or buy property without permission.

(2) Where a decree-holder purchases with such permission, the purchase-money and the amount due on the decree may, subject to the provisions of section 73, be set off against one another, and the Court executing the decree shall enter up satisfaction of the decree in whole or in part accordingly.

Where* decree-holder purchases, amount of decree may be taken as payment.

(3) Where a decree-holder purchases, by himself or through another person, without such permission, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the judgment-debtor or any other person whose interests are affected by the sale, by order set aside the sale ; and the costs of such application and order, and any deficiency of price which may happen on the re-sale and all expenses attending it, shall be paid by the decree-holder.

Bidding by decree-holder.—This rule is similar to sect. 294 of Act X. of 1877, save that the last clause has been added by Act XIV. of 1882, and the words in italics by the present Code. Of these, the words "subject to the provisions of section 73" have been substituted for "if he so desires," and the words "whose interests are affected by" for "interested in."

"Holder of a decree."—An assignee of a decree under an oral agreement, the consideration of which was not paid till after the sale, is not a decree-holder, and it is unnecessary for him to obtain permission to bid.(1)

"Where a decree-holder purchases."—He is bound to exercise the most scrupulous fairness; if he or his agent dissuades others from purchasing, or openly disparages the property,(2) it is sufficient ground to set aside the sale.(3) The Privy Council have held that that is too sweeping in its terms, and leave to bid puts him in the same position as any other purchaser.(4) It would be different if the disparaging remarks were made by a purchaser who was not the decree-holder.(5) If the decree be reversed the sales under it to decree-holders fall through, but not the sales to bonâ fide purchasers who were not parties.(6) A decree-holder purchasing with leave to bid and set off must pay the deposit required by sect. 306 (O. XXI. r. 84) in cash, but the sale ought not to be set aside for default where all parties (including the Government as represented by the officer conducting the sale) waive their right to the deposit in cash.(7)

"With such permission."—The decree-holder is absolutely bound to obtain permission before he can purchase.(8) Leave to bid puts the decree-holder in the same position as any other purchaser.(9)

"Be set off."—This was not allowed where the provisions of sect. 295 of the former Code applied,(10) the set off being intended to prevent trouble and inconvenience and not to alter the substantial nature of the transaction; (11) and the set off can only be accepted for so much of the judgment debt as the assets applicable to its discharge may suffice to satisfy.(12) The purchaser can only be compelled to refund the rateable amount due to the other attaching creditor, either by summary process in execution, or by suit, or he may be given the option of electing a re-sale.(13) The terms of the present rule make the set-off subject to the provisions of sect. 73. permission, purchasing the mortgaged property in execution of a decree, and setting off the price, which was insufficient to satisfy his decree, was not bound in subsequent execution proceedings to give credit for the market value of the mortgaged property, but only for the actual purchase price ; (1) but where the property sold was the equity of redemption, and after purchase the mortgagee decree-holder applied for execution of the balance of his decree against the assignee of the mortgagor, he had to give credit for the price set off, plus the mortgage debt, that being what an independent person would have had to pay if he had purchased.(2) It would be otherwise if he had sold the mortgaged property.(3) The mortgagee decree-holder purchasing does not stand in a fiduciary position towards his mortgagor,(3) and is only obliged to give credit for the amount of his bid.(4) In the Mofussil the purchaser may give a receipt for the amount due under his decree, instead of paying cash into Court.(5)

"By himself or through another person."—A purchase by the undivided son of a decree-holder is presumably with joint funds and is the purchase of the decree-holder.(6)

"The Court may."—It is discretionary with the Court to set aside a sale, and it will not do so if no substantial injury has resulted.(7)

"On the application of the judgment-debtor."—This cannot be done by suit as the dispute falls within sect. 47 ; (8) even where the sale was procured by fraud, and purchased by a person who was not a party, a suit will not lie, at all events as against the judgment-creditor ; (9) likewise where the sale was brought about secretly and the purchasers were benameedars of the decree-holders ; (10) nor will a suit for possession lie after the sale has been set aside.(11)

"By order set aside the sale."—A purchase by a decree-holder, without permission, is not ipso facto void ; it is a good sale until set aside ; (12) but where he applied for permission and it has been refused and yet he purchased benami, the sale was set aside.(13)

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule under O. XLIII. r. 1 (f). But it was held that no appeal lay from an order refusing permission to a decree-holder to bid, but it did against an order confirming or setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale.(1) No second appeal lies from an order on appeal under this rule, notwithstanding that sect. 47 bars a separate suit in such a case.(2)

Restriction on bidding or purchase by officers.

73. No officer or other person having any duty to perform in connection with any sale shall, either directly or indirectly, bid for, acquire or attempt to acquire any interest in the property sold.

Bidding by officers.—This rule corresponds with sect. 292 of Act X. of 1877, save that the words "or other person" have been added by the present Code, which also substituted "the property sold" for "any property sold at such sale"

"No officer."—The pleader of a party is not an officer; (3) but where such a pleader acted improperly, a sale to him was set aside.(4) The Calcutta High Court have, however, held it was improper for a vakeel acting in execution proceedings to make himself in any way interested in the purchase; (5) and in the North-West, pleaders are directed by circular orders not to purchase property sold in execution of decrees in which they are concerned, and it was inexpedient that they should by purchase become the persons entitled to execute decrees in such suits.(6) The words added give the rule a much wider scope. No Judge, legal practitioner, or officer connected with any Court is allowed to deal in actionable claims by sect. 136 of the Transfer of Property Act.(7)

Sale of agricultural produce.

74. (1) Where the property to be sold is agricultural produce, the sale shall be held,—

(a) if such produce is a growing crop, on or near the land on which such crop has grown, or,

(b) if such produce has been cut or gathered, at or near the threshing-floor or place for treading out grain or the like or fodder-stack on or in which it is deposited:

(2) Where, on the produce being put up for sale,—

(a) a fair price, in the estimation of the person holding the sale, is not offered for it, and

(b) the owner of the produce or a person authorized to act in his behalf applies to have the sale postponed till the next day or, if a market is held at the place of sale, the next market-day, the sale shall be postponed accordingly and shall be then completed, whatever price may be offered for the produce.

Special provisions relating to growing crops.

75. (1) Where the property to be sold is a growing crop and the crop from its nature admits of being stored but has not yet been stored, the day of the sale shall be so fixed as to admit of its being made ready for storing before the arrival of such day, and the sale shall not be held until the crop has been cut or gathered and is ready for storing.

(2) Where the crop from its nature does not admit of being stored, it may be sold before it is cut and gathered, and the purchaser shall be entitled to enter on the land, and to do all that is necessary for the purpose of tending and cutting or gathering it.

Sale of agricultural produce.—With reference to sub-rule (1) of r. 74 it has been considered that agricultural produce should, on the analogy of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, sect. 129, ordinarily be sold at the place where they are attached, unless a better price is likely to be realized by sale at the nearest place of public resort. In sub-rule (2) a discretion has been allowed, on the analogy of sect. 131 of the same enactment, to postpone the sale of agricultural produce where such a course is necessary or desirable to prevent the property from being purchased at an inadequate figure.

Negotiable instruments and shares in corporations.

76. Where the property to be sold is a negotiable instrument or a share in a corporation, the Court may, instead of directing the sale to be made by public auction, authorize the sale of such instrument or share through a broker.

"May."—The sale through a broker is permissive and not obligatory.(1)

Sale by public auction.

77. (1) Where moveable property is sold by public auction the price of each lot shall be paid at the time of sale or as soon after as the officer or other person holding the sale directs, and in default of payment the property shall forthwith be re-sold.

(1) Baboo Luchmeeput v. Lekraj Roy, 8 W. R. 415 (1867).

(2) On payment of the purchase-money, the officer or other person holding the sale shall grant a receipt for the same, and the sale shall become absolute.

(3) Where the moveable property to be sold is a share in goods belonging to the judgment-debtor and a co-owner, and two or more persons, of whom one is such co-owner, respectively bid the same sum for such property or for any lot, the bidding shall be deemed to be the bidding of the co-owner.

"Where moveable property," etc.—That is other than negotiable instruments or shares sold through a broker. The sale of arms by a Nazir is excluded from the operation of the Indian Arms Act.(1)

"Purchase-money."—The provisions of this rule give the officer or other person holding the sale a discretion to allow the purchase-money to be paid at a reasonable time after the sale has been made.(2) The provisions of r. 71 making a defaulting purchaser liable for any deficiency apply to a re-sale under this rule.(3)

"Co-owner."—It was originally proposed to check the litigation attendant upon the sale of moveables belonging to the judgment-debtor and a co-owner. It was considered that where the property was not of the nature referred to in r. 76, the fairest solution was to concede to the co-owner a right of pre-emption analogous to that conferred by r. 88, and at the same time debarring him from any remedy other than participation of the proceeds where he has failed to purchase, and is unable to show that in spite of due care and diligence he had notice of the sale. The Select Committee, however, while retaining the right of pre-emption, considered that they did not feel justified in penalizing a third part for the indebtedness of a judgment-debtor who happened to be a co-owner in joint property.

Irregularity not to vitiate sale, but any person injured may sue.

78. No irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale of moveable property shall vitiate the sale; but any person sustaining any injury by reason of such irregularity at the hand of any other person may institute a suit against him for compensation, or (if such other person is the purchaser) for the recovery of the specific property and for compensation in default of such recovery.

Irregularity in sale of moveable property.—This rule corresponds with

(1) Wala Hiraji v. Hira Patil, 9 B. 518 (1885).

(2) Shah Fareed Alum v. Sheo Charun Ram, 4 A. H. C. R. 37 (1872).

(3) Ramdhani Sahai v. Rajrani Kooer, 7 C. 337 (1881).

sect. 252 of Act VIII. of 1859. By sect. 298 of Act X. of 1877, the words "publishing or conducting" were inserted, and instead of the words "by reason of such irregularity may recover damages by a suit in Court," the words "by reason of such irregularity at the hand of any other person may institute a suit against him for compensation, or (if such other person be the purchaser) for the recovery of the specific property and for compensation in default of such recovery" were substituted.

"Irregularity."—The omission in the sale proclamation of the amount of the decree is not an irregularity; (1) nor the omission of the service of the notification of sale on the judgment-debtor or in his village.(2) The fact that the amount really due is overstated will not invalidate a sale in execution; (3) but if the sale proclamation warrants a title the injured party may apply to set the sale aside,(4) it not being a mere irregularity,(5) and the owner can follow the property in the hands of the purchaser.(5)

"Any person."—If a person sues to recover possession of what was taken in excess of the interest of a judgment-debtor, without seeking to interfere with the sale in execution of the interest of the judgment-debtor, he need not sue within the period of limitation prescribed by law for a suit to set aside a sale.(6)

"At the hand of any other person."—A decree-holder is liable to be sued by the rightful owner for the value of property not belonging to the judgment-debtor sold in execution.(7) The latter part of this rule codifies the decision in Mohanund Haldar v. Akial.(8)

79. (1) Where the property sold is moveable property of which actual seizure has been made, it shall be delivered to the purchaser.

Delivery of moveable property, debts and shares.

(2) Where the property sold is moveable property in the possession of some person other than the judgment-debtor, the delivery thereof to the purchaser shall be made by giving notice to the person in possession prohibiting him from delivering possession of the property to any person except the purchaser.

the debtor from making payment thereof to any person except the purchaser, or prohibiting the person in whose name the share may be standing from making any transfer of the share to any person except the purchaser, or receiving payment of any dividend or interest thereon, and the manager, secretary or other proper officer of the corporation from permitting any such transfer or making any such payment to any person except the purchaser.

Notice.—Sub-rule (2) has been slightly remodelled. For form of notice under this section, see Form No. 146, Schedule IV., of former Code.

Delivery of debts and shares, sub-rule (3).—In the under-mentioned case (1) the Court said, "No question has been raised as to whether the order required by sect. 301 of the Code was served. The presumption, therefore, is that this order was served; and it may be a question whether, if the order after sale required by sect. 301 were served, the service of the prohibitory order, which is the form of attachment before sale required by the Code, is material or is wholly immaterial." See Schedule IV., Forms 147, 148 of last Code. In this as in other parts of the Code the reference to public companies in connection with shares has been omitted, it being presumably considered that the word "corporation" sufficiently covers the case.

Transfer of negotiable instruments and shares.

80. (1) Where the execution of a document or the endorsement of the party in whose name a negotiable instrument or a share in a corporation is standing is required to transfer such negotiable instrument or share, the Judge or such officer as he may appoint in this behalf may execute such document or make such endorsement as may be necessary, and such execution or endorsement shall have the same effect as an execution or endorsement by the party.

(2) Such execution or endorsement may be in the following form, namely:—

A. B. by C. D., Judge of the Court of (or as the case may be), in a suit by E. F. against A. B.

(3) Until the transfer of such negotiable instrument or share, the Court may, by order, appoint some person to receive any interest or dividend due thereon and to sign a receipt for the same; and any receipt so signed shall be as valid and effectual for all purposes as if the same had been signed by the party himself.

Transfer of negotiable instruments and shares.—This rule corresponds with sect. 267 of the Code of 1859 and (with slight alterations) 302 of the last.

(1) Debendra Kumar Mandil v. Rup Lall Das, 12 C. 546, 548, 549 (1886).

As to reference to corporation, see notes to last rule. A held shares in a company which were duly seized and sold in execution of a decree against him to B. The Judge, acting under the corresponding section of the Code of 1859, executed deeds of transfer to the purchaser, and the company was ordered to register the transfer in their books, but refused to comply with the order. The purchaser was unable to obtain from A the certificates of the shares. Held that, although the company's deed of settlement (under which the Act of Parliament declared that the company should be regulated) gave to the Board of Directors power of approval or disapproval of intending shareholders, they had no option as to registering a shareholder who purchased a share in execution, and that they were bound to grant him, under the circumstances, new share certificates.(1)

Vesting order in case of other property.

81. In the case of any moveable property not hereinbefore provided for, the Court may make an order vesting such property in the purchaser or as he may direct; and such property shall vest accordingly.

Sale of immoveable property.

What Courts may order sales.

82. Sales of immoveable property in execution of decrees may be ordered by any Court other than a Court of Small Causes.

"Sales of immoveable property."—This rule is similar to sect. 304 of Act X. of 1877. A decree charging land is an interest in immoveable property.(2) Huts are immoveable property.(3) A decree declaring a decree-holder's lien on property without distinctly declaring his right to sell the same may be executed against that property either by attachment and sale or by attachment and management.(4) A debt secured by a mortgage lien upon immoveable property, more especially if the mortgagee is not in possession, is not immoveable property.(5) A Munsif cannot sell property lying outside his jurisdiction.(6)

"Court of Small Causes."—If such a Court sells immoveable property the purchaser acquires no title.(7) The rights and interests under a mortgage of immoveable property is not saleable by a Court of Small Causes.(8)

Postponement of sale to enable judgment-debtor to raise amount of decree.

83. (1) Where an order for the sale of immoveable property has been made, if the judgment-debtor can satisfy the Court that there is reason to believe that the amount of the decree may be raised by the mortgage or ease or private sale of such property, or some part thereof, or if any other immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, the Court may, on his application, postpone the sale of the property omprised in the order for sale on such terms and for such period s it thinks proper, to enable him to raise the amount.

(2) In such case the Court shall grant a certificate to he judgment-debtor authorizing him within a period to be nentioned therein, and notwithstanding anything contained in ection 64, to make the proposed mortgage, lease or sale:

Provided that all monies payable under such mortgage, ease or sale shall be paid, not to the judgment-debtor, but, save n so far as a decree-holder is entitled to set off such money under he provisions of rule 72, into Court:

Provided also that no mortgage, lease or sale under this ule shall become absolute until it has been confirmed by the Court.

(3) Nothing in this rule shall be deemed to apply to a sale f property directed to be sold in execution of a decree for sale in nforcement of a mortgage of, or charge on, such property.

Postponement of sale.—The first clause of this rule corresponds with part f sect. 243 of Act VIII. of 1859. The rest, save the last proviso in the second lause, and the portions in italics, was added by sect. 305 of Act X. of 1877. hat Act also appended a clause: "When such certificate has been granted and long as it remains in force the provisions of section 248 shall not apply." This as repealed by Act XIV. of 1882, which added the last proviso in the second lause, and also added the words, "and notwithstanding anything contained in ct. 276 [sect. 64]" to the second clause. The words in italics have been added y the present Code. The Bombay High Court held that the corresponding ction to this rule applied to a mortgage decree, declaring that certain properties e sold in satisfaction of the mortgage debt; (1) but the Calcutta High Court eld otherwise; (2) and by notification such section was made applicable to roceedings after decree in mortgage suits, but now the third clause of the rule istinctly excludes such proceedings, so far as Bengal and Assam were con-erned.(3) The rule does not apply to suits for rent in Bengal.(4)

"Sale of immoveable property."—This was held to include all sales of immoveable property, the decision being given in reference to a decree on mortgage,(1) but property directed to be sold in execution of a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge is now excluded by the third clause of the present rule.

"The amount of the decree."—That is, the whole amount due on the decree. No mortgage will be sanctioned, or certificate granted, or the mortgage confirmed, unless the decree can be fully paid off.(2)

"The Court may postpone the sale."—This is an enabling rule, and qualifies the prohibitions contained in sect. 64. On compliance with the conditions of this rule a private alienation, notwithstanding sect. 64, becomes absolute, even against all claims enforceable under the attachment.(3) Postponement is discretionary with the Court.(4) It should exercise its discretion, and if it finds that a fair case has been made out, it should postpone the sale ; (5) but the judgment-debtor must most distinctly show that the money due can be well raised in some way other than by immediate sale, and that the creditor will not be put to loss ; (6) and that the debt will be paid off in a reasonable time ; (7) twenty years,(7) two or three years,(8) and even one year are unreasonable,(9) but six months has been considered reasonable.(7) Where, however, the property has been put up to auction in execution and bids have been made, the Court cannot postpone the sale merely on the representation of a judgment-debtor that he can obtain a higher price by private transfer, there being no reasonable ground to believe that the judgment debt would be realized thereby.(10)

"Authorizing him."—The authority is only to the judgment-debtor to whom it is granted, and the sale in pursuance thereof does not affect the share of another judgment-debtor.(11) Where the defendant is the guardian of a minor under the Guardian and Wards Act of 1890, the authority under this rule will not give him power to mortgage unless he also gets the permission of the Court which appointed him guardian.(12) The Court cannot itself give a lease or mortgage. It can only grant the debtor time to do so himself.(13) The rule is enabling, and qualifies the provision contained in sect. 64. On compliance with

"Until it has been confirmed."—When in pursuance of a certificate to sell granted by two Courts the attached property was sold, and the sale confirmed by the superior of the two Courts, confirmation by the other Court was unnecessary.(2)

Appeal.—See sect. 47.

84. (1) On every sale of immoveable property the person declared to be the purchaser shall pay immediately after such declaration a deposit of twenty-five per cent. on the amount of his purchase-money to the officer or other person conducting the sale, and, in default of such deposit, the property shall forthwith be re-sold.

Deposit by purchaser and re-sale on default.

(2) Where the decree-holder is the purchaser and is entitled to set off the purchase-money under rule 72, the Court may dispense with the requirements of this rule.

"Deposit."—The officer conducting the sale cannot insist upon a deposit being made before acceptance of a bidding; but if it appears that persons without means have been put forward to make sham biddings, and fraudulently frustrate the sale, he would be justified in inquiring into the trustworthiness of the bidder before accepting his bid.(3) A decree-holder of the party to whom the lot is knocked down is equally bound to make the prescribed deposit as any other auction-purchaser.(4) But where all parties interested waived their right to a deposit, it was held the sale should not be set aside.(5) A relaxation of the rule is now made in the case mentioned in the second sub-rule. If there is any dispute as to whether the deposit was offered or not it should be decided by the Judge before commencing a second sale.(6) There has been a conflict of opinion whether, if the deposit is not made as required, the sale is no sale at all,(7) or whether this circumstance is an irregularity only.(8) The first opinion is no longer law.(9) But it has been recently held that if the balance of purchase money is not paid, there is no sale under the Code.(1) The mere making of the last bid does not conclude the sale : for the conclusion of a sale it is necessary for the sale-officer to accept the final bid and to make a declaration who is the purchaser and to order him to pay him the deposit under this rule.(2)

"Default."—The sale is to be held "forthwith," so a fresh proclamation or statement of the hour of sale is not necessary.(3) The sale is not to be adjourned. The putting up of the property again, and soliciting fresh bids is a continuation of the original sale, a part and parcel of the proceedings which had their origin in the first putting up of the property, and which do not come to an end until the property has been knocked down to a purchaser, and that purchaser has made the statutory deposit.(4) An officer conducting a second sale is not bound to commence from the next highest bid below that made by the defaulter. He may do so if the next highest bidder is willing to abide by his bid, otherwise he should commence the sale de novo.(5)

Loss on re-sale.—Under r. 71 a defaulting purchaser is answerable for loss by re-sale. It has been held that the corresponding section in the last Code applied to re-sales here dealt with, and that the first purchaser could be compelled to pay the difference between the first and the second sales.(6)

85. The full amount of purchase-money payable shall be paid by the purchaser into Court before the Court closes on the fifteenth day from the sale of the property :

Time for payment in full of purchase-money.

Provided that, in calculating the amount to be so paid into Court, the purchaser shall have the advantage of any set-off to which he may be entitled under rule 72.

"Shall be paid."—The provisions of the rule are imperative, and must be given effect to.(7) In default of payment the deposit is forfeited, if the Court thinks fit, under the next rule,(8) and the property re-sold under r. 85, and the defaulting purchaser is answerable for loss by re-sale.(9) The proviso to the rule is new.

"Into Court."—These words have been inserted to render it clear that the purchaser is bound to see that the money reaches the Court in time. The post office is not the agent of the Court.(1)

Date of payment.—Sect. 307 of the last Code, which the rule replaces, ran, "before the Court closes on the fifteenth day after the sale of the property exclusive of such day,(2) or if the fifteenth day be a Sunday or other holiday, then on the first office day after the fifteenth day." Instead of the words "after" and "exclusive of such day," the present rule uses the word "from," which will have the same effect. The provisions relative to the occurrence of a Sunday have been omitted because the matter is sufficiently covered by sect. 10 of the General Clauses Act of 1897. In these two respects, therefore, the former section and the present rule are the same. Under the last Code, however, it was held that days (as during the vacation) when the Court was closed but the office was open were not holidays within the meaning of the former section.(3) The practice of the Original Side of the High Court is that payment of interest follows as a matter of course, when the purchaser of property at a Registrar's sale is out of time in paying into Court the balance of his purchase-money.(4)

Procedure in default of payment.

86. In default of payment within the period mentioned in the last preceding rule, the deposit may, if the Court thinks fit, after defraying the expenses of the sale, be forfeited to the Government, and the property shall be re-sold, and the defaulting purchaser shall forfeit all claim to the property or to any part of the sum for which it may subsequently be sold.

Default.—This rule corresponds with a portion of sect. 254 of Act VIII. of 1859 and with sect. 308 of Acts X. of 1877 and XIV. of 1882, save that the words in italics have been substituted for the word "shall" appearing in the earlier Codes. The former section has been applied to proceedings in execution under a mortgage decree in Bengal and Assam.(5)

"In default of payment."—Under the rules of the Madras High Court payment into the Government Treasury is sufficient payment; (6) likewise, it is a sufficient compliance with the decree, if the judgment-debtor bring the money into Court within the specified time and diligently take the necessary steps required by departmental rules for the actual payment into the Treasury.(7)

"Be forfeited to Government."—This is imposed in order to prevent waste of the Court's time in conducting re-sales. The fact that the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor do not ask for a re-sale was held to be no reason why Government should forego the forfeiture; (1) but the wording of the Code was then imperative, "shall be forfeited." The modification introduced by the present Code makes it discretionary with the Court to direct the forfeiture or not, and has been inserted to prevent hardship caused in such cases as the last mentioned.(2)

Appeal.—An appeal under the last Code lay from an order under the corresponding section where the defaulting purchaser attached the decree in execution of which the property was sold to him, and a petition for revision was held not to be maintainable.(3) According to this decision an appeal lies under sect. 47, ante.

Notification on re-sale.

87. Every re-sale of immoveable property, in default of payment of the purchase-money within the period allowed for such payment, shall be made after the issue of a fresh proclamation in the manner and for the period hereinbefore prescribed for the sale.

"Fresh proclamation."—This rule is sect. 309 of the last Code. A fresh notification is not prescribed in the case of every re-sale, but only when the re-sale is in default of payment of the purchase-money within the time allowed for such payment.(4) The rule does not apply to a postponed sale,(5) or to a case in which the property is put up again and sold forthwith under r. 84, ante.(6)

88. Where the property sold is a share of undivided immoveable property and two or more persons, of whom one is a co-sharer, respectively bid the same sum for such property or for any lot, the bid shall be deemed to be the bid of the co-sharer.

Bidding by co-sharer.—This rule modifies the terms of sect. 14 of Act XXIII. of 1861, which provided that where "a share of a putteedaree estate paying revenue to government" was sold, "if the lot shall have been knocked down to a stranger, any co-sharer other than the judgment-debtor, or any other member of the co-parcenary, may claim to take the share sold at the sum at which the lot was knocked down. Provided that the claim be made on the day of sale and that the claimant fulfil all the conditions of the sale." The rule was altered to its present form by sect. 310 of Act X. of 1877, save that this rule omits the words "in execution of a decree" after the words "property sold," and substitutes the words "bid the same sum for such property or for any lot, the bid shall be deemed to be the bid" for "advance the same sum at any bidding at such sale, such bidding shall be deemed to be the bidding" as it appeared in the Code of 1877.

"Is a share of undivided immoveable property."—This does not include the interest of a mortgagee in such a share, and this rule does not apply to the sale of such interest.(1) Sect. 14 of Act XXIII. of 1861 was held not to apply to land sold in execution of a decree of a Revenue Court.(2)

"Co-sharer."—An officer conducting a sale of land which was a share of a putteedaree estate had to take notice of a claim made by a person under sect. 14 of Act XXIII. of 1861 and to receive the purchase-money as a fulfilment of the conditions of sale, subject to any question which might be raised by any party interested as to the claimant's title.(3) If his right were clear the sale might be confirmed in his favour; if doubtful, the sale might be confirmed in favour of the other bidder, leaving the co-sharer to his remedy by suit; (3) he ought not to have been substituted for the actual purchaser. His position was that he could advance his claim to pre-emption, which would be adjudicated on later.(4) Under that Act a co-sharer having preferred his claim to pre-emption, the sale could not be held as void merely by the failure of the person to whom the property was knocked down to make the deposit.(5) The right of pre-emption can only be claimed by those who are co-sharers or members of the coparcenary at the time the auction sale takes place.(6) A title which is still defeasible at the date of the sale is not sufficient to support a claim under this rule.(7) A decree-holder, who under Mahomedan law would be entitled to pre-emption, is not entitled to that right on sale in execution of his decree.(8) Where the judgment-debtor's rights in a putteedaree estate were sold and purchased by his son in the name of his father-in-law, who was not a co-sharer and who after the sale waived his rights in favour of the judgment-debtor, held that a co-sharer who had fulfilled requirements was entitled to pre-emption.(9) A suit by a person claiming pre-emption for possession is premature and unmaintainable. He should sue to set aside the order confirming the sale in favour of the auction-purchaser, and to have himself declared entitled to pre-emption and to be substituted for the auction-purchaser.(10) Where a revenue sale has been caused by the default of a co-sharer and the property is purchased at that sale by him, there may be such relations between him and his co-sharer as would justify the Court in treating such sale as for the benefit of both.(11)

Appeal.—No appeal lies under O. XLIII. r. 1. It was held that the auction bidder, not being a party, could not appeal from an order confirming the sale in favour of a co-sharer,(2) and that a co-sharer aggrieved under the former section, not being a person mentioned in sect. 311, now O. XXI. r. 90, could not appeal objecting to the sale being confirmed in favour of the auction-purchaser and ask its confirmation in his own favour, and an application for revision was also refused.(3)

Application to set aside sale on deposit.

89. (1) Where immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person, either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court,—

(a) for payment to the purchaser, a sum equal to five per cent. of the purchase-money, and

(b) for payment to the decree-holder, the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder.

(2) Where a person applies under rule 90 to set aside the sale of his immoveable property, he shall not, unless he withdraws his application, be entitled to make or prosecute an application under this rule.

(3) Nothing in this rule shall relieve the judgment-debtor from any liability he may be under in respect of costs and interest not covered by the proclamation of sale.

Object of rule.—This rule affords a special indulgence to the judgment-debtor. It gives him yet one more chance of saving his property.(4) It also confers a right upon certain persons other than the judgment-debtor. See post, note, "Who may apply." A Court has no power to set aside a sale under this rule unless the applicant has strictly complied with its provisions.(5) It

The section was held to apply to sales of holdings in execution of decrees for arrears of rent; (3) but not to sales under the Public Demands Recovery Act (I. B. C. of 1895).(4) The former section was held to apply even if the execution proceedings be referred to the Collector, who had no power to set aside a sale under the provisions of the Code. It was also held that there was nothing which precluded the Court from setting aside the sale merely because it had been confirmed.(5) When money has been deposited under this rule it is not liable to rateable distribution under sect. 73.(6)

Who may apply.—Under the last Code any person might have applied, "whose immoveable property has been sold under this Chapter." A benamdar of a person whose immoveable property was sold could apply.(7) These words gave rise to a conflict of decision. It could hardly be that these words referred to the judgment-debtor alone or the Legislature would have said so. The question then arose to whom else the section did apply. It was not even every judgment-debtor who could apply, but only those whose property had been sold under the Code.(8) It was held that a simple mortgagee of a tenure or holding sold for arrears of rent, such sale being with right to purchaser to avoid incumbrances, could apply,(9) but not a second mortgagee not a party to the suit whose interest had not passed under the sale.(10) The purchaser of a share of an occupancy-holding transferable by custom could apply; (11) as also a judgment-debtor who has effected a private sale of his property during the pendency of the attachment-proceedings; (1) or a donee under a gift made while the property was under the attachment; or a durmokararidar where the mokarari tenure was sold for arrears of rent; (2) a purchaser subsequent to attachment and prior to sale.(3) In short, any one whose interest is bound by a sale might apply though he be no party to the suit or to the decree under which the sale took place.(4) An application by a person entitled, together with a person not entitled, was received and payment made jointly by those persons was held to be a sufficient payment.(5) Where under sect. 310A of the former Code a reversionary heir applied for and obtained leave to make a deposit, it was held that he made it as a person interested in the payment of money within the meaning of sect. 69 of the Indian Contract Act.(6)

It was held that the following could not apply:—An under raiyat,(7) but this has since been dissented from; (8) howladar under tenure-holder; (9) a purchaser at a private sale from the judgment-debtor after the sale in execution; (10) a purchaser prior to sale in execution of decree against his vendor; (11) nor on the same principle a person claiming a share in immoveable property sold in execution of a decree against his co-sharers; (12) nor a person who has contracted to purchase land, such contract not creating in itself any interest in or charge upon the property; (13) an attaching creditor,(14) nor an owner or holder of an interest who has parted with his title since the sale or has acquired such title since the sale.(15) Even before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act of 1907, this rule did not apply to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears.(16)

"owning such property or holding an interest (1) therein" (the latter term no doubt applying to cases of interest in the property itself as distinguished from personal claims against others relative thereto) are by themselves clear enough. It must, however, be remembered that "such property" is property sold in execution of a decree. It is only the judgment-debtor's interest in any property or the interest therein of any other person bound by the decree that can be sold in execution of a decree.(2) A question therefore arises whether the rule applies only to persons whose interests are affected by the execution sale: the point is not clear, as the word "sold" may refer, not to what can, in law, be sold and passes, but what, in fact, is sold in the sense of purported to be sold. Perhaps the latter is the case, for the Select Committee say "words have been added so as to make it clear that a purchaser acquiring a title before the sale in execution can claim the benefit of the sale. In other respects the Committee consider it advisable to adhere to the wording of the section."

The date of sale is the date when the property is actually sold.(3)

"Depositing."—If the applicant does not make the deposit within the prescribed period the Court has no jurisdiction to set aside the sale.(4) If the judgment-debtor has been misled by a mistake of the Court the consequences of that mistake ought not to fall upon him; as where the amount was fixed by an order of the Munsif himself in the presence of and with the assent of the pleaders of both parties,(5) but an application has been refused where the Court did not declare the amount to be paid, and it did not appear that the officer of the Court from whom the applicant was said to have received certain information in regard to the amount to be deposited, was the officer who was charged by the Court with the duty of supplying that information.(6) When the petitioner, owing to the fact that the presiding officer left the Court earlier than usual, could not make the deposit that day, it was held that the deposit was made validly on the following day.(7) Where the owner of immoveable property applies he is under a liability to deposit a sum equal to 5 per cent. on the purchase-money, for payment to the purchaser, even where the land has been purchased by the decree-holder.(8) An applicant who had fulfilled the requirements of clauses (a) and (b) of this section of the last Code, was held (1) entitled to have the sale set aside even though something more on account of the poundage was recoverable from him, under the head of costs provided for in the last clause of that section. A deposit under this rule must be unconditional.(2) Where the applicant prayed that the money should be kept in deposit until the disposal of an appeal, and the money therefore could only be received on the condition expressed in the application, the deposit was held not to be good under sect. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.(3) But where money was duly deposited under the former section, and a petition which might have been refused was made later, it was held a good deposit.(4) A mere application without an actual deposit is not sufficient compliance with the law.(5) Where there was only an offer to pay, but no actual deposit, and the prayer to set aside the sale was joint with another which could not be entertained under the Proviso, it was held that no second appeal lay.(6) A mortgagee making payments to save the mortgaged property from being sold in execution of a rent decree has an additional lien on the property for the sums so paid by him.(7)

The deposit under this rule must be made within thirty days from the date of the sale. But it is not necessary that the notice under r. 92 should be made within that time.(8)

"For payment to the purchaser."—It has been said that 5 per cent. is given partly as a solatium to the purchaser for the loss of his bargain.(9) It makes no difference that the purchaser is also the decree-holder.(10)

"For payment to the decree-holder."—These words mean that the decree-holder is the person solely entitled to the money paid into Court.(11) Sect. 295 (now 73) does not apply to a deposit made by a judgment-debtor under this rule.(12) It was also, therefore, held that it was sufficient to deposit only the amount of the decree for the satisfaction of which the sale was proclaimed and took place.(13) In this rule the term decree-holder means only the person for satisfaction of whose decree the sale has been ordered, and does not include other persons who would have a right to claim rateable distribution out of the sale proceeds under sect. 73.(14) of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder."

It has been held that the word "received" ought to be construed to mean sums of money either actually received by the decree-holder, or which he was in a position to credit to his account, and that this was not the case as regards amounts deposited by other purchasers.(1) It has been held also that the payment to the decree-holder need not be in cash, and that it is enough if he is satisfied with regard to the whole of the amount due to him.(2) The Bombay High Court held that what the former section contemplated was an actual receipt by the decree-holder, and that nothing else would satisfy its requirements.(3)

"Or prosecute."—The addition of the words "or prosecute" was intended to give effect to the undermentioned ruling.(4)

Impleading parties.—It was proposed, in order to give effect to two rulings of the Allahabad High Court (5) in applications under the following rule, to enact a clause declaring that an applicant under this rule should be bound to implead the purchaser and decree-holder as parties to the application which should in their absence be dismissed. It had been also held in the Calcutta High Court that an auction-purchaser is entitled to notice before an order is made under this section.(6) The proposed clause has not been enacted.

"Unless he withdraws."—This rule prevents a person who has preferred an application under r. 90 from making or prosecuting an application under this rule, until he has withdrawn the other; but the converse is not provided for.(7) This rule and r. 90 permit of applications by persons who could not have applied under sects. 310 and 311 of the last Code.

Appeal.—Sect. 588 of the Code of 1882 did not provide for an appeal against an order under sect. 310A, corresponding with this rule.(8) It was, however, held that if and when an order under that section fell under sect. 244 (c) (now 47) it was appealable,(9) and where it did not fall within that section, as in the case of an auction-purchaser stranger, the order was subject to revision.(1) It was held that no appeal lay from an order refusing to restore to the file an application dismissed for default of appearance.(2) And it has been recently held that an order on an application to set aside a sale under this rule is not a decree within the meaning of sect. 2.(3) The true nature of the order must be examined and the character of the parties affected by it must be ascertained before it can be determined whether the order falls within the scope of sect. 47.(4)

Application to set aside sale on ground of irregularity or fraud.

90. (1) Where any immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree, the decree-holder, or any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets, or whose interests are affected by the sale, may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it:

Provided that no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud.

"May apply."—An application under this rule is limited to the grounds set forth in it, and a Court cannot set aside a sale under this rule upon grounds which have not been pleaded by the applicant.(5) The former section, according to a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, applied to sales of mortgaged property in execution of mortgage-decrees.(6) It was held that there was no provision in Act X. of 1859, entitling a party to have a sale set aside on the ground of non-attachment and non-proof of publication of sale-proclamation.(7) Apparently, the application should be made to the Court executing the decree. It was held that where execution of the decree had been transferred to the Collector, application had to be made to him ; (1) but that decision had reference to the Rules of the N.W.P. and was not followed in Bombay.(2) A beneficial owner is not a necessary party to a proceeding for setting aside an execution-sale. It is competent to the Court to set aside the sale finally and conclusively, as against the beneficial owner, although his benamdar only and not he is made a party to the proceeding.(3) The decree-holder is a necessary party to an application under this rule,(4) as also the auction-purchaser (5) and judgment-debtor.(6) The issue which arises when a petition is referred under this rule is a judicial proceeding and ought to be carried out with regularity ; the Court fixing a day for the hearing of the matter of the petition, and giving reasonable notice to all parties, i.e., such as would afford to each party fair and reasonable opportunity of bringing the necessary evidence on or before that day.(7) If an application is made within time it must be dealt with, and cannot be summarily rejected on the ground that it might have been made earlier.(8) When the application has been duly presented, framed and heard, each objection should be taken up separately and determined. Specifically distinct findings should be come to on each point, and the reasons for the findings duly recorded.(9) Where there has been no fraud, application to set aside a sale under this rule must, under Art. 166 of the Limitation Act, be made within thirty days of the date of sale. Where, however, irregularities affecting the sale have by the fraud of the judgment-creditor or other parties to the sale been kept concealed from the judgment-debtor, he is entitled, whether the sale has been confirmed or not, to apply ; the time for making the application being computed from the date when the fraud first became known to him.(10) But if proceedings to set aside a sale were under sect. 47 (formerly 244), then the period of thirty days does not apply, but the three years' limitation.(11) Fraud with regard to the knowledge of the judgment-debtor may be before the sale, for fraud is a continuing influence.(1) As to sect. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, see cases cited.(2) An application to set aside a sale on the ground that no notice had been served as required by O. XXI. r. 22, cannot be made under this rule but must be made under sect. 47.(3)

Immoveable property.—The section is limited to sales of immoveable property. It has been held that a decree upon a mortgage is incapable of being so described and regarded, and an application under the former section with regard to the sale of such a decree was incompetent.(4)

Who may apply.—As to this, the section in the last Code ran, "the decree-holder, or any person whose immoveable property has been sold under this Chapter." There was a conflict upon the meaning to be attached to the term "decree-holder," as also as to the meaning of the other words. As regards the first term, the question was whether it was limited to the decree-holder, at whose instance the lands were first attached; the decree-holder who brings the property to sale; (5) or any decree-holder entitled to share in the assets, and also having an interest, to see that the sale which produces those assets was regularly conducted.(6) The present rule adopts a series of decisions to the effect that a person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets (and presumably his representative) is entitled to apply under this provision.(7) The phrase italicized obviously included the judgment-debtor or his representative.(8) A question, however, arose as to who else was included, it being admittedly not restricted to the judgment-debtor. It was held that any person might apply to set aside a sale if his interests were affected by the sale in the sense that it would pass by the sale; (9) and, therefore, a person claiming to be beneficial owner was held to have a locus standi,(10) as also the mortgagee of the judgment-debtor,(11) and a transferee of portion of an occupancy holding,(12) but not a person claiming by title paramount to the judgment-debtor inasmuch as his title to the property is not affected by the sale, whether it be regular or irregular.(1) A plaintiff who has attached immoveable property before the judgment has no present interest in such property and therefore cannot apply under this rule.(2) It was, of course, held that persons whose property had not been sold could not apply,(3) such as a co-sharer in undivided property where the share of his co-sharer was sold,(4) or purchaser.(5) Though an auction-purchaser cannot directly apply, yet he may, and, indeed, should, be made a party to the proceedings after an application has been made,(6) and then, if an order is made against him, he can appeal.(7) It was held under the last Code that where an occupancy holding was sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, obtained against the raiyat, a person who claimed to have purchased the holding from the latter could not apply (as the representative of the judgment-holder) to have the sale set aside under sects. 244 or 311 of that Code (now represented by sect. 47 and this rule) if the holding was not transferable by custom or usage.(8)

Material irregularity.—An application under this rule is limited to the ground set forth in it.(9) Where a Court has no jurisdiction to make a decree, then any sale which takes place under such decree is void, and a nullity.(10) Where, again, the Court of execution has no jurisdiction the sale is void.(11) This rule, however, assumes that a valid decree is being executed by a Court of competent jurisdiction. It assumes regularity in this respect.(12) The words "set aside" show that the section is inapplicable to the case of a sale which is by reason of want of jurisdiction null and void, as distinguished from a sale which is merely voidable for irregularity. That which is a nullity cannot from its very nature be set aside, while in the cases to which the rule does apply the sale is merely voidable at the instance of the party affected thereby, and, therefore, can be set aside. A plea, therefore, to the jurisdiction of the executing Court is not admissible on an application under this rule.(1) The rule is thus confined to irregularities in the particular incidents of execution following a valid decree, which are mentioned in it. Where the whole suit is attacked another suit is maintainable, notwithstanding unsuccessful applications under O. IX. r. 13 (formerly sect 108) and this rule, and omission to appeal against orders on such applications; for the existence of a real suit is assumed.(2) 'A Court, however, may, to use the language of sect. 115 (formerly 622), act illegally, or with material irregularity, in the exercise of a jurisdiction which it does possess. The present rule refers in express terms to irregularity only. It has, however, been said (3) that though the term "illegality" does not include "irregularity," the latter word as used in this section is wide enough to include illegality. The question is not one of importance unless the illegality is held to be of such a character as to affect the validity of a sale in a manner making it absolutely void. This has been held to be the result in the case of certain illegalities.(4) The view taken in some of

The Privy Council have, however, pointed out that a sale is a sale and not a nullity, whether there be an irregularity or a direct contravention of express provisions: Gobind Lal Roy v. Ram Janam Missir, 21 C. 70 (1893); Kokil Singh v. Edal Singh, 31 C. 385, 391 (1904); Radha Charan Das v. Sharfuddin Hosain, 17 C. these cases that the act or omission was an illegality vitiating the sale was dissented from in others. In certain cases there was probably nothing more than an irregularity. It is clear that where a party professes to apply under this rule, then by such application he admits that the case must be treated as one of material irregularity to be redressed pursuant to its provisions only upon proof of injury.(1) Ordinarily at least such irregularity will make the sale voidable only. Assuming, however, that there may be an illegality, which ipso facto renders the sale void, then it must be held either that the rule covers such a case, in which event injury must be established, or the case is one without the rule. In the latter case it has been held that the Court has, apart from the former section, an inherent right to set aside all illegal proceedings provided that the interests of third parties are not affected,(2) or it might have refused to confirm a sale on grounds other than those on which a party may apply to set it aside under this rule.(3) The case being ex hypothesi outside the section it has been held that no proof of injury is necessary.(4) The tendency, however, of modern decisions is to check judgments holding sales to be nullities on account of what are really mere irregularities in procedure.(5) And unless it can be established that the sale is for want of jurisdiction or other cause absolutely void, the case will, when there is an irregularity of the kind described, fall within and be subject to the provisions of the rule.

As the former section was confined to cases of mere irregularity of the nature described, it did not apply where the sale was sought to be set aside on another ground such as fraud.(6) Where, however, fraud in the execution-proceedings was alleged and attempted to be substantiated and the question arose between parties,(7) an application lay under sect. 47 (formerly 244), and

The judgment in Harbans Lal v. Kundan Lal, 21 A. 140 (1898), misses the point. The earlier decisions referred to did not hold that a sale could be set aside under s. 311 without proof of loss, but that illegality of the character referred to was outside the section, and therefore not affected by its limitations.

no separate suit would lie.(1) And an application was held maintainable under that section after a sale had been confirmed.(2) A purchas by the decree-holder benami at a price less than that at which he was permitted to bid constitutes fraud.(3) If the decree itself which is the real basis of the title was fraudulently and collusively obtained, the sale at which a purchase was made never became absolute.(4) See, however, now as to fraud the next paragraph.

The following have been considered material irregularities :—

Delay in making the deposit required by sect. 300 of the last Code ; (5) the adjournment of the sale from time to time without sufficient ground ; (6) non-publication or improper publication of sale-proclamation,(7) such as an omission to state the amount of revenue,(8) or to put up a copy of the proclamation in the Collector's office ; (9) a sale subsequent to insanity of the judgment-debtor ; (10) omission to state or misstatement of Government revenue in notification of sale ; (11) misstatement of the value of the property in the sale-proclamation calculated to mislead intending bidders,(12) selling before thirty days have expired after notice of proclamation,(13) or without a fresh proclamation where there has been a postponement,(14) or after a portion of the property has been released to a third party ; (15) or issuing a sale-notification without notifying in it that the property would be sold on a day named or as soon thereafter as it the legal representative of a judgment-debtor who has died after attachment and before sale; (1) basing a decision on evidence not taken in accordance with the law.(2)

The irregularity, however, if any, must be material.(3)

The following have been held to be either not irregularities or material irregularities :—

Issuing notices of attachment and sale together; (4) holding a sale for a larger sum than was actually due; (5) omission to deposit 25 per cent. of purchase-money at date of sale; (6) entering the wrong pergunnah in the proclamation if it be served in the right village and the estate has been identified; (7) publishing the notification of the sale at an inferior cutcherry, the sudder cutcherry of the zemindar being beyond the Court's jurisdiction; (8) omitting to state the rent of a tenure brought to sale; (9) selling at an inadequate price; (10) sub-dividing one of the lots advertised for sale; (11) a District Judge postponing a sale in obedience to an injunction issued by a Subordinate Judge; (12) sale of immoveable property on a close holiday; (13) or without issue of fresh proclamation; (14) selling portion of estate within jurisdiction, although the greater part falls within another district.(15)

"Or fraud."—These words have been added. Under the previous law fraud was not within the rule. (See page 1016.) As to this amendment, the Select Committee said, "We think that the existing law as contained in sect. 311 of the Code is defective, the omission in the section to refer to fraud as a ground for setting aside a sale having led some Courts to hold that an order on an application setting up fraud as a ground for relief is, unlike an order made on an application under sect. 311, a decree and open to second appeal.(16) This result, which often involves a considerable prolongation of these proceedings, is in our opinion undesirable. We think that applications for the setting aside of sales should, so far as the procedure applicable to them is concerned, stand on the same footing, whether they are based on the ground of irregularity or on the ground of fraud." (1)

"In publishing or conducting."—It was proposed to amend the section by adding irregularity in attachment, as to which there was previously doubt.(2) But this has not been done, as such irregularity cannot affect the price. The expression "conducting the sale" was held not to include any proceedings unconnected with the actual carrying out of the sale, but to refer to the action of the officer who makes the sale, and not to anything done antecedent to the sale. Therefore an objection that the property attached and sold was not by law saleable, was held not to be an objection contemplated by this section, but one which the judgment-debtor might have taken at the time of attachment prior to the sale.(3) So again, an objection by a representative of a judgment-debtor that he had inherited nothing from him must be raised before the sale in execution.(4) So, too, an objection that execution is barred must be taken before the sale.(5) All that the Court can decide under this rule is whether the sale shall be set aside upon the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting it—not whether execution was granted after the judgment had been satisfied,(6) or should go at all.(7) The words "conducting the sale" embrace all acts which the Court is required to perform down to the close of the sale, which terminates when the lot is knocked down to the highest bidder. The irregularity must not, therefore, be anything which takes place after the sale, such as the receipt of payment by the Court after the fifteenth day from the date of sale.(8) The irregularity must be in conducting the sale, and the whole responsibility of conducting the sale is in the Court. An agreement between parties not to bid or dissuading others from bidding is not an irregularity within the meaning of the section: and unless the acts done amount to fraud is no ground for otherwise setting aside a sale.(9)

Substantial injury.—Under the present, as under the last, Code there must have occurred substantial injury, that is, loss which is wrongful,(10) by reason of the irregularity complained of. There has, however, been considerable conflict as to the manner in which the connection between the two had to be established and inferred. The Privy Council held that there must be evidence,(1) and that that evidence must be direct,(2) and that a Court could not without evidence, and upon a mere supposition, find that an irregularity did cause an injury by causing an inadequate price to be bid at the sale. The amount or nature of the evidence required in any case depended upon its own circumstances.(3) Difficulty was felt as to what was meant by "direct" evidence. Sometimes it was considered that this meant that persons should be called to testify that had it not been for a particular set of circumstances they would have done so and so; would have given a greater price; that they were willing to bid but were deterred and misled; and so forth. In other cases it was considered sufficient that there should be evidence of circumstances which would warrant the necessary, or at least the reasonable, inference that the sale was the result of the irregularity complained of.(4) The Select Committee stated that the language of the rule has been altered in order to meet the doubts raised as to the evidence upon which the Court can act, and they refer to the Privy Council decision, Tasadduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain. Apparently it is intended to affirm that ruling; but the difficulty hitherto has been as to its construction. Proof, of course, will be required, and this proof may, it is submitted, on a true construction of the Privy Council decisions, consist of "direct" evidence in the narrow sense stated, or of evidence of facts which warrant an inference that the irregularity was the cause of the inadequate price. It has been held that where the property is sold at an inadequate price owing to irregularities in the conduct and publication of the sale there is substantial injury within the meaning of this rule.(5)

Appeal.—An order dismissing an application under this rule on the ground of the non-appearance of the applicant is appealable.(6) If a judgment-debtor has made an application under this rule, he can (if he withdraws it) apply under sect. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.(7)

91. The purchaser at any such sale in execution of a decree may apply to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.

Application by an auction-purchaser.—The rule is limited to the case stated. Therefore a purchaser cannot apply to set aside a sale on the ground of deficiency in area in the land sold,(8) or of misrepresentation or concealment in the sale-notification inducing purchase at a price more than the property is really worth.(9) If the purchaser knew that the debtor had no saleable interest the sale should not be set aside.(1) The second paragraph of sect. 313 of the last Code, which this rule replaces, has been transposed to the next rule.

"No saleable interest."—The words "no saleable interest" have been said to refer to cases where a purchaser buys a property which turns out to have no existence at all or to be of no saleable value whatever.(2) It may be questioned whether the substitution here of the word "value" for interest is correct. The words mean "nothing to sell," and are not intended to confine the cases in which the application may be made to those in which the judgment-debtor though having an interest such interest is by prohibition of law or otherwise unsaleable.(3) After a vesting order the debtor has no interest.(4) The rule does not apply where the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in a portion only of the property,(5) nor is the fact that the property is subject to a mortgage sufficient to support an application,(6) or the fact that one of two judgment-debtors has no interest if the other debtor owns the entire interest.(7) Although default has been made in the payment of revenue, ownership of the property continues in the defaulter until a revenue sale takes place. A purchaser, therefore, of an estate in execution of a decree, after default has been made in paying revenue for it, cannot, in the event of a subsequent revenue sale, seek to set aside the sale under which he had made the purchase on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest.(8) See also notes to r. 93, post. Under the Code of 1859 a sale under a second attachment was valid and would prevail over a sale subsequently held under a prior attachment and passed all the interest of the judgment-debtor.(9) Now, however, when property is sold in execution it cannot be sold again, and when a judicial sale takes place all previous attachments effected upon the property sold fall to the ground.(10)

(3) No suit to set aside an order made under this rule shall be brought by any person against whom such order is made.

"Where no application is made."—The Court is bound in such case to confirm the sale.(1) The former section was held inapplicable to proceedings in execution of certificates under the Public Demands Recovery Act.(2)

"Disallowed."—This word has no reference to an order passed on an appeal, but refers to the disallowance of the objections by the Court before which the proceedings under sect. 311 (now r. 90) are taken.(3)

"Absolute."—Though a proposal was made for its abolition, it will be observed that the Court is still required to pass an order confirming the sale (4) :—an order which was held to be more than a mere ministerial Act, and which was a judicial determination that none of the objections on which it could have been sought to set aside the sale existed.(5) It is also to be observed that whereas sect. 312 of the last Code referred only to applications under sect. 311, the present rule deals with applications under all the three preceding rules. The words "as regards the parties to the suit and the purchaser" have been omitted, probably as being unnecessary.

Thirty days.—The period of thirty days under this rule will not begin to run against a person applying under r. 89 if for any reason the final bid remains for a time unaccepted by the sale-officer.(6) precluded himself from setting up the irregularity.(1) When a sale is set aside the effect of it is to remit the parties to the position in which they stood immediately before the sale, without prejudice to any other proceedings in execution which have legally been performed. Thus an attachment once legally made is revived upon the reversal of the sale in execution.(2) An application by a purchaser to set aside the sale of immoveable property sold by the sheriff, or for compensation on the ground of deficiency in the area of the land sold, is not entertainable under the Code.(3) Before a sale has become absolute, objection can of course be taken under this rule, but after that, and when a certificate has issued, when the defendant is a bonâ fide purchaser at a Court sale, any irregularity in the proceedings leading to the sale cannot be relied on to set it aside.(4) If the Court ordering the sale has jurisdiction, a purchaser of the property sold is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the order for execution any more than into the correctness of the judgment on which the execution issues.(5) The Limitation Act (Art. 12) protects bonâ fide purchasers at judicial sales, who are not required to inquire into their accuracy or legality, by providing a short limit of time within which suits may be brought to set them aside.(6) All irregularities if they existed are cured by the certificate of sale.(7) And if a purchaser who is not a party to the suit satisfies himself as to the jurisdiction of the Court to order a sale, an obligation which continues until the sale is completed,(8) his title is not affected by irregularities of procedure, which are cured by the certificate of sale. The accuracy, therefore, of some decisions (which hold (9) that in certain cases a sale is void against a purchaser) is in question in any case where the illegality complained of does not really amount to an absence of jurisdiction. It cannot, it was held, be laid down as a general proposition, that under no circumstances can a sale be set aside as against a bonâ fide purchaser. The Court must determine in each case whether it will be in accordance with the principles of justice, equity, and good convenience, that the sale ought to be set aside or not.(10) The circumstance alone that a decree under which a sale has taken place has itself been set aside is not sufficient.(1) Nor where a stranger to the proceedings purchases property bonâ fide, can the sale to him be set aside on the ground that the decree had already been satisfied out of Court at the time the sale was held.(2) Nor is there a distinction between sales in execution of money and mortgage-decrees.(3) Where there is fraud on the part of the plaintiff, the validity of the sale is not affected, if the purchaser is not implicated in the fraud; (4) aliter where the purchaser is so implicated.(5) The reason for this rule is that a purchaser is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the order for execution or of the judgment on which it issues. If he were, there would be little inducement to buy.(6) There is, however, a distinction between decree-holders who purchase under their own decree which is afterwards reversed, and bonâ fide purchasers at a sale in execution of a valid decree to which they were no parties. As regards the latter the rule is as just stated, but a judgment-creditor who is also a purchaser, purchases subject to the result of the litigation.(7) The reason for this is that the person purchasing is, at the time he purchases, a party to the proceeding which may get rid of the authority for the sale. When he is not a party to such proceeding the sale is not set aside.(8) A sale cannot be set aside because the judgment-debtor has applied to be declared an insolvent.(9) to all persons affected.(1) In the event of the death of the judgment-debtor application must be on notice to his representative.(2) It is not necessary that the notice under this rule should be given within thirty days of the date of the sale.(3)

Sub-rule (3).—This clause in the last Code ran "no suit to set aside, on the ground of such irregularity, an order passed under this section shall be brought by the party against whom such order has been made." The words "on the ground of such irregularity" are omitted, as the rule applies to all the three preceding rules. If an application has been made and disallowed under this rule the order subject to appeal under O. XLIII. r. 2 is final, and cannot be the subject of a suit.

The preceding law may be summarized as follows:—A sale of land being a proceeding in execution, a question which arose as to the setting aside of such a sale was a question relating to execution, which, if it arose between the persons mentioned in sect. 244 (now sect. 47), had to be determined by order of the Court executing the decree, and not by a separate suit.(4) As to the procedure to be followed in such cases in execution, that depended upon the grounds which were put forward to impeach the sale. If the sale was impugned on the ground of irregularity,(5) then the decree-holder, judgment-debtor, or other person whose property was affected by the sale applied under sect. 311 (now r. 90). If the sale was sought to be set aside for any other cause than irregularity, such as fraud (6) or want of jurisdiction,(7) in the executing Court,(8) or non-liability of property to sale,(1) or other ground, then an application lay under sect. 244 (now 47). If objection came from the purchaser on the ground of want of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor, then he applied under sect. 313 (now r. 91). Though the auction-purchaser could not apply under sect. 311 (now sect. 90), if the sale was confirmed under the following section the order of confirmation bound both the parties and the purchaser.(2) The result of this was that these persons could not, alleging irregularity, sue to set aside an order of confirmation whether such order was passed without (3) or after an application under sect. 311. An auction-purchaser might, however, alleging that there was no irregularity, have sued to set aside an order setting aside and refusing to confirm a sale.(4) While, therefore, a suit would not lie to set aside a sale on the ground of existence of irregularity, a suit would lie to confirm a sale on the ground that there was no irregularity. Suits also lay to impeach the validity of sales on a ground other than that of mere irregularity, provided that the question did not arise between parties within the meaning of sect. 244 (now 47). Subject to the remarks made in this and the allied sections, the law appears to be the same now. In cases where sales are sought to be impeached on grounds other than those of mere irregularity, proceedings under sect. 47 must be taken. As regards irregularities, if no application has been made under r. 90, then this rule applies. If an application has been made to set aside a sale and refused, then, subject to an appeal against such order, the same result would seem à fortiori to follow. If, on the other hand, the sale is set aside, then the auction-purchaser may appeal, but subject to such appeal the order would appear to be final. The same rule applies to orders made on applications under r. 91. As regards orders under sect. 47 they are decrees,(5) and subject to appeal. A separate suit can only lie in such cases as are outside the scope of sect. 47.

Appeal: Revision.—An appeal lies against an order on an application under this rule, O. XLIII. r. 1 (g), setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale.(6) No appeal lies from an order refusing an application to restore to the file an application which has been dismissed for default.(7) No second appeal lies.(8)

If, as he should be, the auction-purchaser is made a party to the proceedings he can appeal if the sale is set aside.(1) Where a sale is sought to be set aside on some ground other than those mentioned in these rules, and the matter is dealt with under sect. 47 (as in the case of fraud (2)), the order under that section is a decree and appealable as such, and a second appeal lies.(3) An objection cannot be allowed for the first time in appeal.(4) Where a Court wrongfully sets aside or refuses to set aside a sale its order may, if the circumstances fall within the terms of sect. 115, be the subject of revision.(5)

Return of purchase-money in certain cases.

93. Where a sale of immoveable property is set aside under rule 92, the purchaser shall be entitled to an order for repayment of his purchase-money, with or without interest as the Court may direct, against any person to whom it has been paid.

"Where a sale."—The corresponding section in the last Code was "when a sale of immoveable property is set aside under sects. 312 or 313, or when it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, etc., and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it." (6) The auction-purchaser under the last Code might have applied under sect. 313 (now r. 91), and the Court might have set aside the sale under the same section (see now r. 92), adjudicating upon the question raised, viz., the absence of all saleable interest. The section was enabling and not prohibitive of an independent action.(7) Such an application might not, however, be made, and it might yet become known and found (8) either by the Court of execution (9) or in another suit (10) that the property did not belong to the judgment-debtor. In this case also the purchaser was upon the fact being found entitled to recover back his purchase-money. It was held that the words in sect. 315 of the last Code "when it is found," etc., must be taken in connection with a finding in a separate suit to mean "when it is found in some proceeding by which the judgment-creditor is bound." For to compel the judgment-creditor to refund merely because in some proceeding between other parties a Court had decided that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest would be contrary to principles of justice.(1) The finding must have been in some proceedings to which a judgment-creditor was a party or at any rate of which he had notice.(2) It is to be observed that the present rule omits "where it is found," etc., as also the last paragraph of the former section. Nothing has been said as to the reason for the first omission, but as regards the second the Committee stated that they added words at the commencement of the rule, "in substitution of the last paragraph of the section which thus becomes unnecessary." Presumably this observation refers to the italicized words "an order for repayment." Such an order being due for money may be enforced in execution under the rules providing for the execution of decrees and orders for money.

As regards absence of saleable interest in private sales there is under sect. 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, an implied covenant for title by the vendor. In the case of execution-sales there is no warranty of title either by the decree-holder or by the Court. The purchaser buys the property with all risks and defects in the judgment-debtor's title. In the absence of fraud his only remedy is to apply to set aside the sale and to recover back his purchase-money when the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest at all. He cannot obtain a refund in proportion to the extent to which the judgment-debtor had no interest.(3) The right of the purchaser is absolute even though he himself caused the property to be put up for sale, provided that he was not guilty of fraud or misrepresentation or did not guarantee the validity of the sale.(4) See notes to r. 91, ante.

"Is set aside."—See notes to preceding sections.

"The purchaser shall be entitled."—When a sale is set aside the purchaser's right to recover the purchase-money is not limited to an application under this rule to the Court executing the decree, but he may bring a suit for the purpose.(5) He may sue to cancel the sale; (6) to establish his claim to the land where possession has not been obtained,(1) and to recover the purchase-money.(2) A person was not a party precluded from suing because an order under sect. 313 of the last Code was refused where, subsequent to such refusal, it appeared that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest.(3) If the judgment-debtor has any saleable interest in the property, the Court has no jurisdiction to order a refund, and an order made can be set aside on revision.(4) The former section was held to empower the auction-purchaser to require repayment of the purchase-money, but did not impose upon the decree-holder the duty of tendering the money as soon as the sale was set aside. He was bound to pay the purchase-money only if called upon to do so, but not otherwise ; and until he was so compelled to refund the purchase-money, he had no right to call upon the judgment-debtor to pay his debt a second time.(5) In a recent case under sect. 315 of the last Code, it was held that an auction purchaser seeking to recover the purchase-money on the ground that he has been deprived of the property owing to the failure of the debtor's title had no remedy outside the provisions of the Code, and the remedy given is not a suit for money had and received under Art. 62 of Schedule I. of the Limitation Act of 1908, but is a suit within Art. 120 of that Act.(6)

"Interest."—Thus the Court may refuse interest (7) as when a person claims more than he is found entitled to ; (8) or if it is proved that the purchaser has contributed to the loss he has sustained.(9) He should not, however, be charged with the expenses of the sale.(10) Where a sale has been set aside the purchaser has been allowed the money laid out by him for the benefit of the property, accounting for the rent and profits.(11)

It was held that when a sale had become absolute the Court would grant a certificate to the representative of a deceased purchaser.(3) A Court should not make an ex parte order amending a certificate ; (4) and there is no appeal from an order amending a certificate on review inasmuch as the decree having been already executed the matter is not one relating to execution under sect. 244 (now 47), ante.(5)

Stamp. Registration.—Under sect. 35 of the Indian Stamp Act (II. of 1899) a sale certificate cannot be registered unless it has been duly stamped. The sale certificate should not be granted until the auction-purchaser has furnished the requisite stamp paper for its engrossment. Attention is directed to the circumstance, which is often overlooked, that the stamp duty is payable, not by the deposit of the sum required to purchase stamps, but by the stamps themselves.(6) Under the provisions contained in the second paragraph of sect. 89 of the Registration Act (III. of 1877), a copy of the certificate is to be sent by the Court to the Registering Officer. Although sects. 17, 32, 58, 61, and 89 of that Act except sale certificates from the ordinary procedure in Registration, it was said in the Notes accompanying the first draft of the Bill that, "They leave it doubtful whether the action of the Court does or does not complete the registration of the certificate. The procedure laid down in the case of sale certificates would seem sufficiently to meet the requirements contemplated by registration." It was accordingly proposed in the first draft to declare by an addition to sect. 89 of the Registration Act on the lines of sect. 81 of that enactment, that the "filing of such copy or copies shall have the same force and effect as registration." But this proposal has not been adopted.(7) The stamp is required for the sale certificate itself. The Court does not require an application for a certificate in writing, and if in writing it need not be stamped.(8) question of law and fact depending on the questions what could be sold and what was in fact sold. To ascertain this the decree and the whole execution proceedings must be looked at. The question what legally passed by a sale cannot depend altogether upon the form of the sale certificate.(1) See the notes to sect. 65, ante, where this matter is more fully considered,(2) as also the question whether any title to the thing sold is warranted. Sect. 316 of the last Code dealt with the date of the vesting of the title, a matter which is now governed by sect. 65, to which refer. This provision replaces that in the old Code, that the title should vest from the date of the certificate.

Delivery of property in occupancy of judgment-debtor.

95. Where the immoveable property sold is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor or of some person on his behalf or of some person claiming under a title created by the judgment-debtor subsequently to the attachment of such property and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under rule 94, the Court shall, on the application of the purchaser, order delivery to be made by putting such purchaser, or any person whom he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf in possession of the property, and, if need be, by removing any person who refuses to vacate the same.

Delivery of possession.—This rule corresponds with sect. 263 of Act VIII. of 1859. The words "and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under sect. 316," and "on application by the purchaser," were added by sect. 318 of Act X. of 1877. The present Code altered "sect. 316" to "rule 94" and made the additions noted in italics, the words "the application of the purchaser" being substituted for "application by the purchaser." As to trespass on land of which actual possession has been given to the purchaser under this rule, see case cited.(3)

"Subsequently to the attachment."—A purchaser cannot get summary possession under this rule from the lessee pendente lite of the judgment-debtor and must bring a suit for possession.(4)

"On the application of the purchaser."—A judgment-debtor in spite of confirmation of sale may oppose an application for possession on the ground that the sale was illegal, his occupancy holding not being transferable by custom; (1) but he cannot oppose on the ground that the sale of a permanent tenure was confirmed without previous payment of the landlord's fee under sect. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.(2)

"Order delivery."—A purchaser of an undivided share of a Hindu estate acquires only a right to sue for partition and for delivery of what may be allotted as that share. Such proceedings cannot be taken under this rule, and the dismissal of such an application under this rule will not bar a purchaser's suit for partition.(3) For form of order, see the First Sched. App. E. No. 24.

Putting the purchaser in possession.—A purchaser can obtain khas possession although in the first instance he obtained possession under r. 96; (4) and a plaintiff obtaining symbolical possession can maintain a fresh suit for real possession,(5) so can the assignee of the purchaser whose possession has been resisted by the judgment-debtor; (6) as also a purchaser whether legal delivery has been given or not; (7) but he must have endeavoured to get possession under this rule first.(8) By a later decision it was held a suit was maintainable even if he had not applied for possession under this rule; the remedies by suit and under this rule being concurrent.(9) Possession being given fifteen years after the sale does not entitle the judgment-debtor to recover possession by suit unless he shows twelve years' possession before he was dispossessed.(10)

Limitation.—An application for possession must be within three years of the grant of the sale certificate under Art. 178 of Act XV. of 1877 (Limitation Act),(11) even where the assignee of the purchaser applies; (12) the date being reckoned from when the certificate has been granted, that is, when it has been issued to him. (13) The Madras High Court, however, held that in respect of a suit for possession the date from which time begins to run is that of the sale, and the Article applicable being 138.(14) This rule now expressly provides that in respect of an application for possession the three years run from the date of the certificate. A purchaser may sue for possession within twelve years of symbolical possession being given him.(15) Symbolical possession as against the grantors of a perpetual lease will not be effective against the lessee, so as to save limitation on a suit for possession.(1) The Allahabad Court have, however, held that a purchaser cannot bring a suit for possession, even if his application for possession under this rule is barred, as the matter comes under sect. 47.(2) In another case the same Court has held that the fact that an application under this rule has been rejected as being made beyond time is no bar to a suit by the auction-purchaser for the property purchased.(3) And there are other decisions holding that sect. 47 is inapplicable.(4)

Appeal.—An appeal was held to lie from an order rejecting the application of the purchaser, who was the decree-holder, the order being appealable as one under sect. 244 (now 47) for possession.(5) But the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts have held otherwise, sect. 244 of the last Code not being applicable;(6) but where the application for possession was resisted by the legal representative of the judgment-debtor on the allegation that portions of the property belonged to him and not to the judgment-debtor, the Calcutta High Court held the application to be one within that section and therefore appealable.(7)

Delivery of property in occupancy of tenant.

96. Where the property sold is in the occupancy of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under rule 94, the Court shall, on the application of the purchaser, order delivery to be made by affixing a copy of the certificate of sale in some conspicuous place on the property, and proclaiming to the occupant by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, that the interest of the judgment-debtor has been transferred to the purchaser.

Delivery of possession.—This rule corresponds with sect. 264 of Act VIII. of 1859, with the exception of the words "and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under sect. 316," which were added by sect. 319 of Act X. of 1877, and the words in italics by the present Code, which also altered "sect. 316" into "rule 94." This rule does not prevent the purchaser obtaining possession, if he can, without the intervention of the Court.(8)

"Order delivery."—The Courts in this country do not give possession by removing the possession of one who is in possession under an apparent bonâ fide title. If the debtor can assert his title in possession by suit only, the purchaser can have no higher claim.(2) Formal possession under O. XXI. r. 36 given by a Court in execution operates as between the parties in point of law and fact, as a complete transfer of actual possession from one party to another; (3) and where land which had been given by a father to his son, a minor, was subsequently attached and sold in execution of a decree against the father, formal possession under this rule to the purchaser completely dispossessed the father, whether he held on his own account or that of his son; (4) but such possession will not take effect as actual possession as against persons who are not parties to the suit,(5) nor against a purchaser, in execution of the rights of the judgment-debtor, who had previously obtained actual possession.(6) The delivery of possession to the purchaser under this rule does not cause dispossession of a person, not the judgment-debtor, found in possession by receipt of rent from tenants, so as to entitle the latter to complain under O. XXI. r. 99.(7) Symbolical possession as against the grantors of a perpetual lease, without reservation to the grantors and with no rights reserved and only a nominal rent, will not be effective against the lessee to save limitation against a plea of adverse possession.(8) The rightful owner dispossessing the other is not a trespasser, and may rely for the support of his possession on the title vested in him.(9) An order under this rule can only be made by the presiding officer of the Court and is a judicial Act.(10)

Limitation.—The period of limitation for an application under this rule, viz. three years under Art. 178, Sched. I. of the Limitation Act, is reckoned from the date when the sale becomes absolute. If formal possession be infructuous, a suit against the judgment-debtor for possession is good within twelve years of the sale under Art. 138 of Sched. I. of the Limitation Act.(11) It has been held that Art. 138 of the Limitation Act only applies to suits in which the auction-purchaser is the plaintiff and the judgment-debtor, or a person claiming through him, the defendant.(12) Where a purchaser is resisted in obtaining possession by a person claiming under a mortgage from the judgment-debtor and sues for possession, the suit is governed by the same article, even though he alleges the mortgage to be collusive and fraudulent,(1) and sues to set it aside.(2) It has been held that if the purchaser be dispossessed by a third party subsequent to formal possession he has twelve years from dispossession to bring a suit; (3) while, if the judgment-debtor be in possession and formal possession be given under this rule instead of under r. 95, a suit for possession against him lies within twelve years of the date of formal possession,(4) as formal possession under either r. 95 or this rule forms a fresh starting point for limitation as against the judgment-debtor,(5) whether actual possession be obtained or not.(6) But a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has recently held that a mere formal possession of immoveable property by a purchaser at a Court-sale cannot prevent limitation running in favour of the judgment-debtor where the latter remains in actual possession; for symbolical possession is neither real possession nor equivalent to it under this Code except where the Code expressly or by implication so provides.(7)

Appeal.—It was held that no appeal lay from an order for possession under the former section.(8) also, at the instance of the applicant, order the judgment-debtor, or any person acting at his instigation, to be detained in the civil prison for a term which may extend to thirty days.

Obstruction of decree holder or purchaser.—These and the following rules have been remodelled. These two rules applied under the last Code to applications made by the decree-holder (1) only, but now to applications both by decree-holder and purchaser, thus embodying the provisions of sect. 334 of the last Code. The preceding Code did not make it obligatory on a decree-holder who was obstructed to pursue his remedies under these provisions. And it was accordingly held that the failure on the part of plaintiff to avail himself of this summary remedy did not bar a suit.(2) Moreover, it was held that there was nothing to prevent the decree-holder or purchaser who had been obstructed from making a fresh application for delivery.(3) The omission to have recourse to the provisions of the former Code did not, it was held, preclude a person from instituting a suit to recover possession or making a fresh application for delivery. An order under the former section passed against a person who had at the instigation of the judgment-debtor obstructed a decree-holder has been held not to bar a suit.(4) A decree for partition is a decree for possession, and the rule is not rendered inapplicable by the fact that the person obstructing claims to be a mulgeni tenant.(5) Every obstruction must be caused either by the judgment-debtor or claimants at his instigation, by persons who have no real interest in the property, or by third parties claimants. The present rules deal with the first two cases and the next with the third.(6) The effect of the remodelling of the rules is as follows: Sects. 328–330 of the last Code applied to decree-holders only, and sect. 334 to obstruction of purchasers. The provisions of these sections are incorporated in rr. 97 and 98, which apply in favour both of the decree-holder and purchaser and against the judgment-debtor. R. 99 applies in favour of the same persons, but against persons other than the judgment-debtor. This rule, which incorporates the portion of sect. 335 which dealt with the purchaser, modifies sect. 331. The provisions as to trying the claim as a suit with the resultant appeal are omitted. But all parties except the judgment-debtor have a right of suit under r. 103. Lastly, rr. 100, 101, and 103, which incorporate sects. 332 and 335, deal with the dispossession of third parties. The former section dealt with dispossession at the instance of the decree-holder and the latter with dispossession by the purchaser. Both are now dealt with together. The Judge should fix a day, make an inquiry on taking evidence, and if he directs that the property should be delivered in whole or in part, should order that possession be given in one or other of the ways mentioned in the Code.(1) It has been held that this rule should be read with r. 95.(2) These and the following sections in the former Code have been held not to apply to proceedings under the Mamlatdar's Act.(3)

"Is resisted."—There is of course no indication as to the nature of the resistance or obstruction, but there must be some overt act of opposition to the Court's officers on the part of some one who is actually present.(4)

"Possession."—This term in this and the next rule has been held to include constructive and symbolical as well as actual physical possession. Possession of immoveable property is not the less real or actual because it is enjoyed through tenants, servants, or members of one's family.(5) The same was held as regards sect. 335 of the last Code,(6) the provisions of which are incorporated in rr. 97, 99, and 100.

Limitation.—The resistance or obstruction referred to is that mentioned as forming the subject of the complaint, and limitation is not necessarily to be computed from the date of first obstruction.(7) For the limitation is one which governs a cause of action arising out of a particular resistance or obstruction.(8) Further, the period mentioned is important only as the limit prescribed within which the judgment-creditors may by virtue of this rule bring what is in effect an action of ejectment against a stranger without the expense of a regular suit. Other proceedings may be taken against a judgment-debtor in execution within the period prescribed from the last application of the kind, even though not instituted within thirty days after a wrongful obstruction.(9) An application must be brought within thirty days of the obstruction, but where, according to the former procedure under sect. 331, the application was converted into a suit, the rights of the parties had to be decided as if an ordinary suit for possession had been instituted by the decree-holder against the defendant.(10) When litigation under that section was pending, the proceedings in execution were suspended.(11) When the litigation was unsuccessful, the period during which they had been pending could not be excluded in computing the period of limitation for execution of the decree.(12) An order rejecting an application as being barred, did not, it was held, prevent the losing party from bringing a regular suit.(1) As regards, however, the present amended procedure, see next rule. A suit lies under r. 103, post.

"Detained in the civil prison."—It was thought that the previous expression, "commit the judgment-debtor or such other person to jail," was misleading as raising questions of diet money as in the case of civil imprisonment for debt. The language has, therefore, been altered to render it clear that the provision relates to conviction of an offence in contempt of justice. The words "without prejudice to any proceedings," etc., in the former sect. 330, have been omitted, though presumably the law remains the same in this respect.

Object of rule.—The object of the corresponding and similar provisions in the last Code was, so far as possible, to prevent the originating of a succession of suits. It was desired that a right should be determined finally in continuation of an original proceeding and not by fresh proceedings.(2) This section, as the last, was limited to application by the decree-holder; (3) but now includes orders made on the application of a purchaser against a person other than the judgment-debtor.(4) A person in whose favour an order under sect. 335 had been made could not claim the benefit of the former section.(5) As to the amendments, vide post.

"Court."—A Superior Court might, it was held, for sufficient cause transfer a claim registered under the former section to a Subordinate Court for trial.(6)

"In possession."—See next paragraph.

"An order dismissing the application."—Under the last Code the claim was registered as a suit, and the Court investigated the claim as such. It then ordered or stayed execution of the decree. The order had the force of a decree, and was appealable as such. No question of title between the plaintiff and his judgment-debtor requiring the decree against them to be reopened could be adjudicated upon. The issues which properly arose in an inquiry were whether the person obstructing was in possession on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor.(1) The word "possession" was not limited to actual physical possession, but included also constructive, such as by a tenant.(2) The issue which arose was one between the decree-holder as plaintiff and the claimant, that is, a person other than the judgment-debtor.

Under the Code of 1877 the claim had to be investigated as if a suit had been instituted under sect. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The powers of the Court were thus strictly limited to an inquiry into the question of possession.(3)

The Code was amended by sect. 52 of Act XII. of 1879, the provisions of which were re-enacted in the Code of 1882, and the power of investigation was enlarged. The investigation was not limited to the fact of possession. Any question of title arising between the contending parties in connection with their right of possession might be finally determined in such investigation as in an ordinary action of ejectment. The order, whether for executing or for staying execution, had the force of a decree determining the title and the right of possession. The plaintiff was not forced to a fresh suit or had a right to bring a fresh suit if the decree was against him.(4) Where possession was shown to have been with the plaintiff the defendants were not, without showing title in themselves, at liberty to impeach the plaintiff's title or to set up a jus tertii. The onus of proving a better title than the plaintiff's rested with them, and they might prove their title as a defence.(5) A Court executing a decree was thus given a special jurisdiction which enabled it to try a claim of which the value of the subject-matter fell below the pecuniary limits of its ordinary jurisdiction.(6)

It will be observed that considerable amendments have been made in the present rule. Under the first paragraph of the former sect. 331 the claim was to have been "numbered and registered as a suit between the decree-holder as plaintiff and the claimant as defendant." Paragraph 2, under which the Court had power in investigation of "the like powers," as if a suit for the property had been instituted by the decree-holder against the claimant, is omitted; as also the third and fourth paragraphs, under which the Court passed an order executing or staying execution which had the force of a decree, and was subject to the same conditions as to appeal. The words "with the like powers" were held to mean that the Court has the same powers for enforcing the attendance of parties and witnesses, etc., as it has in a suit (1) as regards appeal. A refusal to number and register the claim was held to amount to the rejection of a plaint, and was, therefore, appealable,(2) though these decisions have been dissented from.(3) Where a claim was registered out of time no appeal lay, but the order could be objected to in an appeal from the final order which had the force of a decree.(4) Proceedings taken after a decree for possession under sect. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, were in the nature of a fresh suit, and, therefore, an appeal lay.(5) The Court to which an appeal lay depended on the value of the claim and not that of the original suit.(6)

Now the Court, under the second clause of r. 97, ante, is to investigate "the matter." If the obstruction is caused by the judgment-debtor, the order under r. 98 is that the applicant be put in possession. If the obstruction is due to the bonâ fide claim of a third party, the application is dismissed under this rule. It is not stated what the scope of the inquiry in the latter case is to be. Presumably, however, it is to be of a summary character, even if it is not limited to the question of possession. For now a right of suit is given by r. 103 to persons against whom orders are made under the present rule. Their position is therefore assimilated to that of parties against whom orders are made under rr. 98, 100, and 102, to whom a right of suit is given by r. 103 of this Order.

quent stage, viz. to the event which may arise as to the result of the delivery of possession; (1) and give an applicant a right of contesting, without instituting a separate suit, the decree-holder's or purchaser's right to dispossess him.(2) As to dispossession by purchaser, the rule thus incorporates that portion of sect. 335 of last Code. It was held that if in execution of decree a claim made by a third party in possession is rejected, he should either bring a regular suit or wait until he is dispossessed, and then apply under the former section or bring a separate suit, or he might do both.(3) See as to regular suit, which is now dealt with by r. 103, post, of this Order, cases cited.(4) In a suit instituted under that rule the judgment and the decree in the original suit are not admissible in evidence.(5) Where the judgment-creditor obtained an order for possession prior to the death of the judgment-debtor, it was held that there was no necessity for him to bring any other person on the record between the date of that order and the date on which the order was executed.(6) The rule applies to possessory actions.(7) Where in execution a person not a party to the suit is dispossessed, his dispossession does not give him a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the mamlatdar. This rule applies.(8) This rule does not apply where sect. 47 does.(9) It does not apply to a case where the execution of the decree has been transferred to the Collector and he has acted under the powers conferred on him by the Local Government Board under sect.70.(10) A person is none the less a judgment-debtor because he may have acquired an interest subsequent to the date of the decree passed against him.(11) possession,(1) or in receipt of rent from the judgment-debtor,(2) the application should be rejected; but not on the ground of possession if the parties are agreed that the applicant has been dispossessed,(3) nor on the ground that the applicant had not originally obtained possession in a strictly legal manner.(4) It is sufficient if it should appear that the party, though not in personal occupation, was in possession by receipt of rent; (5) or as mortgagee, or as mortgagor through a mortgagee in possession,(6) and has been dispossessed under the decree or under colour of it. A mortgagee from a tenant is in possession on his own account.(7) A member of a joint Hindu family, however, cannot say that he is in possession of any particular portion of the joint family on his own account, his possession being that of the family.(8) A party dispossessed under colour of a decree to which he was no party is entitled to an investigation and to an order if his title is established.(9) If the claimant was in possession, though without a good title, he cannot be dispossessed in execution of a decree against a third party to which he was no party. On the other hand, if the party against whom the decree was obtained was in possession, though without a good title, no person not in actual possession or receipt of rent can resist execution.(10) The onus is on the applicant.(11) The order under r. 101 decides the question of possession, and is made dependent on the result of the suit to establish the right. It is therefore unnecessary to sue to have it cancelled.(12) If there are several applications each application should be tried separately.(13) It is incumbent on the applicant to prove whether or not the judgment-debtor was in possession at the date of the sale; and the onus is not discharged by mere proof that he was in possession at some time antecedent to twelve years before the suit.(14)

Rules not applicable to transferee lite pendente.

102. Nothing in rules 99 and 101 shall apply to resistance or obstruction in execution of a decree for the possession of immoveable property by a person to whom the judgment-debtor has transferred the property after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed or to the dispossession of any such person.

Orders conclusive subject to regular suit.

103. Any party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order is made under rule 98, rule 99 or rule 101 may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property; but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.

Object and scope of rules.—Rule 103 is the second paragraph of sect. 335 of the last Code. The disposition of the rest of the section is as follows: Obstruction of the purchaser is dealt with by rr. 97 and 99, and dispossession of a claimant other than the judgment-debtor by r. 100, ante. A power is thus given where an attempt has been made to deliver possession,(3) and there is obstruction or resistance,(4) to give, after inquiry,(5) a summary decision which shall protect the public peace, prevent obstruction, and terminate the execution proceedings by determining what should be immediately done, subject, as regards claimants other than the judgment-debtor, to the result of a regular suit.(6) The rules are designed for the protection and assistance of decree-holders, purchasers,(7) and third parties dispossessed; (8) rr. 97 and 98 dealing with resistance by the judgment-debtor (as to which, see r. 97, ante); r. 99 with resistance by third parties; and rr. 100 and 101 with third parties dispossessed. A person, it has been held, is not bound to proceed under the former sect. 335. He might if he chose at once bring a regular suit within the ordinary period of limitation. But if he did choose to apply for a summary decision and it was against him, he had to sue within one year from the time of the order.(9) It was also held there was nothing to prevent a decree-holder or purchaser who has been obstructed or resisted from making a fresh application for delivery without making any complaint under sects. 328–330, 334.(1) That case was, however, subsequently distinguished on the ground that it was one in which the purchaser was resisted not by a third party but by the judgment-debtor.(2) The application must be made within thirty days of the resistance or obstruction.(3) The Court was held not bound under sect. 335 to pass any particular order, but only such order as may be proper in the circumstances of the case.(4) A purchaser at a Court sale of the interest of one member of an undivided Hindu family ought not to be put in exclusive possession of the whole undivided land by virtue of a decree against one co-parcener only,(5) but only in joint possession with the others.(6) It has been held that symbolical possession does not amount to dispossession within the meaning of the former section.(7)

"May institute a suit."—See note, post, "Conclusive;" and as to limitation (8) for such a suit, which is one year, and Court-fee,(9) see cases cited.

"Conclusive."—The rule contemplates an order against one party or the other, and if an application is withdrawn, an order allowing the withdrawal is not an order under this rule.(10) The order is one which becomes final and conclusive unless the party against whom it is passed institutes a suit within a year and obtains an adjudication in his favour. Where the Court declined to pass an order, deeming it best that the purchaser should be referred to a separate suit to enforce his purchase, Article 11 of the Limitation Act had no application.(11) If a regular suit is not brought within a year the order acquires the form of a final decree.(12) Though an order under this section is not appealable,(13) it may be made the subject of revision.(14)

ORDER XXII.

Death, Marriage and Insolvency of Parties.

No abatement by party's death, if right to sue survives.

1. The death of a plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the suit to abate if the right to sue survives.

Abatement.—It has been pointed out (1) that the practice in respect of abatement under the Code is different from that which prevailed in the English Courts. A suit, though perfect in its institution, became defective by the death, marriage, or transmission of interest or liability of some of the parties. In such case the suit was said to have abated or become defective, and as a general rule no proceeding could be taken in it until an order to revive the suit or carry on the proceedings had been made. When the abatement was total—that is, caused by the death, bankruptcy, or insolvency of a single plaintiff or the marriage of a single female plaintiff—the case was completely suspended, and could not be proceeded with until it had been revived or the defect cured. Where the abatement was partial merely, as when it was caused by the death of the defendant, it prevented those proceedings only by which the interest of the deceased might be affected, for the death of a defendant made an abatement quoad himself alone. Thus abatement, though it suspended the proceedings in a case, did not put an end to them. But it had not the effect of being a bar to a further suit upon the same cause of action: one of the essentials of res judicata being that the matter must have been determined, and when a suit abated before judgment nothing had been determined in such suit. Under, however, r. 9 of this Order (formerly sect. 371), when a suit abates no fresh suit can be brought upon the same cause of action unless and until the order of abatement is set aside. The provisions of this Order are substantially those of the last Code. Rules 6 and 12 have been added, and sub-rule (2) has been added to r. 10 (formerly sect. 372). The last paragraph of sect. 582 of the last Code has been made r. 11. The provisions of this Order apply to appeals, and the words "plaintiff," "defendant," and "suit" include an appellant, a respondent, and appeal respectively.(2) They did not, however, under the last Code apply to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and judgment-debtor; (3) nor to proceedings in a Mamlatdar's Court.(4) As regards execution proceedings, see now r. 12, post.

(4) Ganpatram Jebhai v Ranchod Haribhai, 17 B. 645 (1893).

Applicability.—This rule is the same as sect. 99 of Act VII. of 1859, save that the words "right to sue" was substituted for "cause of action," by sect. 60 of Act XII. of 1879. See also Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, O. 17, r. 1. The rule is the same as under the last Code. The illustrations have, however, been omitted. Illustrations (a) and (b) to sect. 361 of the last Code have been omitted as founded upon an antiquated decision (Anderson v. Martindale, 1 East, 497) which is not very intelligible to practitioners in this country. Illustration (d) of the section was correct only under the Dayabhaga system, and the word "minor" was not of the essence of the example. The Select Committee expunged also the other illustrations, considering them too obvious to serve any useful purpose. This rule applies to proceedings on appeal; (1) to cases where under an order of Court a reference has been made to arbitration; (2) even after an award has been made but before decree; (3) and under the Dekhan Agricultural Relief Act to proceedings in respect of a conciliation agreement.(4)

"Right to sue."—Under the Code of 1859 "Cause of action" in the corresponding section was held to mean the right to bring an action.(5) "Right to sue" means the right to seek relief by means of legal proceedings.(6) It is a vested right.(7) The cause of action in the original and revived suits must be the same.(8)

"Survives."—All demands whatsoever, and all rights to prosecute or defend any action or special proceeding in favour of or against a person at the time of his decease, survive to and against his executors or administrators, save certain causes of action mentioned below; (9) and promises bind the representatives of the promisor in case of the death of such promisor before performance, unless the contrary intention appear from the contract.(10) A suit for malicious prosecution does not survive on the death of the plaintiff,(11) but after a decree for damages for defamation it does survive on appeal after the death of the appellant to whose estate injury has occurred, for where a claim has been perfected by a judgment, the nature of the relief claimed on appeal stands on a different footing, and it does not follow that the right to appeal against a decree partakes of the nature of the original decree.(12) So also on second appeal.(13) The position in such cases has been enunciated as follows:—"The only cases in which, apart from questions of breach of contract, express or implied, a remedy for a wrongful act can be pursued against the estate of a deceased person who has done the act, appear to us to be those in which property, or the proceeds or value of property, belonging to another, have been appropriated by the deceased person and added to his estate or moneys. In such cases, whatever the original form of the action, it is in substance brought to recover property, or its proceeds or value, and by amendment could be made such in form as well as in substance: in such cases the action, though arising out of a wrongful act, does not die with the person. The property or the proceeds or value which, in the lifetime of the wrong-doer, would have been recovered from him, can be traced after his death to his assets, and recaptured by the rightful owner there. But it is not every wrongful act by which a wrong-doer indirectly benefits that falls under this head, if the benefit does not consist in the acquisition of property or its proceeds in value. Where there is nothing among the assets of the deceased that in law or in equity belongs to the plaintiff, and the damages which have been done to him are unliquidated and uncertain, the executors of a wrong-doer cannot be sued merely because it was worth the wrong-doer's while to commit the act which is complained of, and an indirect benefit may have been reaped thereby.(1) The right to sue will survive to an executor on an action on breach of contract or a tort if on the face of the proceedings it is shown an injury has accrued to the personal estate.(2) It will survive when a Hindu widow sues to recover her husband's estate; (3) to the sons of a Hindu mother who sued to restrain encroachment on the share allotted to her on partition and agreed to sell her interest to the defendants at the value to be found on arbitration, and then died after the award but before the decree; (4) and for the purposes of appeal to the mother of a Mitakshara son who obtained a decree setting aside his father's alienations; (5) to the representatives of a minor who, on attaining majority, sued to have his rights declared respecting property which by a consent decree and conveyance to which he was no party, his grandmother, father, and uncle conveyed to the defendants, and who died pending suit.(6) It also survived against the other defendants when a defendant's interest ceased before he died, without his representatives being added.(7) Where an agent suing on behalf of an undisclosed principal dies pending the suit, the suit should after the death of the agent be continued, if it can be continued at all, by the agent's representatives, and not by the principal.(8)

Not survive.—Causes of action in respect of defamation, assault as defined by the Indian Penal Code, and other personal injuries, not causing the death of the party, and cases where after the death of the party the relief sought could not be enjoyed or the granting of it would be nugatory, e.g. (a) where a passenger was injured but not fatally in a railway collision and died without

Procedure where one of several plaintiffs or defendants dies and right to sue survives.

2. Where there are more plaintiffs or defendants than one, and any of them dies, and where the right to sue survives to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, or against the surviving defendant or defendants alone, the Court shall cause an entry to that effect to be made on the record, and the suit shall proceed at the instance of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs, or against the surviving defendant or defendants.

Applicability.—This rule is the equivalent of sect. 100 of Act VIII. of 1859, save for certain formal amendments made by Act X. of 1877, and the words "right to sue" substituted for "cause of action" by Act XII. of 1879. Except for three verbal alterations it is the same as that of the last Code. It applies to proceedings on appeal.(3) Thus if one of the appellants dies and the application to revive is dismissed as being time-barred, the appeal should be ordered to abate so far as the deceased is concerned, and may proceed at the instance of the remaining appellants ; (4) it cannot have the effect of causing the whole appeal to abate.(5) Again, on the death of one of the respondents, the proper course is to proceed under r. 4, and either to declare that the appeal has abated as against him, and proceed against the other respondents, or to direct the legal representatives of the deceased respondent to be placed on the record.(6) It has been held that a suit does not abate under this rule until the representative of the deceased plaintiff has failed to apply within the time allowed by law.(7)

"Right to sue."—See notes to last rule. The rule is not limited in its application to cases where the right to sue or appeal survives against the surviving defendants or respondents, not as the legal representatives of the deceased, but by reason of a right vested in them antecedent to the suit.(8)

"To the surviving plaintiff alone."—On the death of one of two joint owners, suing for damages in respect of trespass, the cause of action survives to the other alone ; (9) also where the interest of a defendant ceases in the subject-matter of the suit before his death.(10)

Procedure in case of death of one of several plaintiffs or of sole plaintiff.

3. (1) Where one of two or more plaintiffs dies and the right to sue does not survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, or a sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff dies and the right to sue survives, the Court, on an application made in that behalf, shall cause the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit.

(2) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub-rule (1), the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned, and, on the application of the defendant, the Court may award to him the costs which he may have incurred in defending the suit, to be recovered from the estate of the deceased plaintiff.

Applicability of clause (1).—This rule amalgamates sects. 363 and 365 of the last Code and a portion of sect. 366. Sect. 363 dealt with the case of several plaintiffs, and sect. 365 with that of a sole plaintiff. These are now dealt with together in the first clause of the rule. The second clause is the first paragraph of sect. 366 of the last Code. The second paragraph has been omitted, as also the Explanation to that section. As to the definition of "legal representative," see now sect. 2, clause (11). The section corresponding with sect. 363 of the last Code, as originally enacted by Act VIII. of 1859, sect. 101 required the legal representative to make the application to revive, but by Act VII. of 1888, this provision and the latter portion of the former section from the words "the Court may cause" as it formerly stood, were substituted. The words "right to sue" were substituted for "cause of action" by Act XII. of 1879. The rule applies to proceedings on appeal,(1) and on revision,(2) but not under the last Code to proceedings in execution of a decree ; (3) or to the case of a plaintiff dying after decree ; (4) as to execution proceedings, see now r. 12, post. Where there is only an application for leave to sue in formâ pauperis but no suit pending in Court, and the applicant dies before the leave is granted the right to sue as a pauper, being a personal right, cannot survive in the legal representatives of the deceased applicant.(5)

Sect. 365 in the last Code corresponded with sect. 102 of Act VIII. of 1859 but underwent much modification. Under sect. 102 it was optional with the Court to make an order on the application of the legal representative, and it was not until Act VII. of 1888 that the mandatory form came into force. The words "where the cause of action survives" were inserted by Act X. of 1877 ; the words "cause of action" being changed to "right to sue" by Act XII. of 1879.

The former section was held to have reference only to proceedings before decree ; (1) and not to a suit in which a decree had been made ; (2) not, under the last Code, to proceedings in execution of decree ; (3) nor to an application to obtain permission to sue as a pauper.(4) But as to execution proceedings, see now r. 12, post.

"Dies."—This refers to death before decree.(5)

"Legal representative."—The legal representative need not, since the passing of Act VII. of 1889, if not under sect. 50 (of the last Code), take out administration to continue a suit, but must do so before decree.(6) An executor under Act V. of 1881 is the legal representative of the deceased before probate has been obtained, but one of several executors cannot carry on a suit without proving the will.(7) The rule presupposes the applicant is the legal representative. If the representative character is denied, or where two or more claim it, the procedure under r. 5 should be followed ; (8) but where a decree has been made in favour of the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the Appellate Court should not go into the question of the representative's right to represent the deceased or dismiss the suit on finding that he or she had no right.(9) The words "Legal representative" must, where there are more legal representatives than one, be read in the plural ; thus where the appellant died and only one of his three representatives was brought on the record the appeal abated ; (10) but in Bombay it has been held that an application by one of the heirs of the appellant is sufficient, and the respondent is entitled to have the names of the others brought on the record to have them bound by the decree.(11) All the legal representatives must be brought upon the record,(12) as far as is possible ; (13) if any refuse to be joined as appellants they should be made respondents ; (14) or any who cannot or are unwilling to be joined as applicants should be added as defendants : (15) and in such a case the application should not be construed as no application by the legal representative so as to cause an appeal to abate.(16) The sons of a deceased plaintiff, members of a joint Mitakshara family, may apply to revive without obtaining administration or a certificate under Act VII. of 1889.(1) In a suit by a Hindu widow to recover property belonging to her deceased husband, the heirs of the husband are the legal representatives; (2) and not the widow's personal heirs (3) But in the case of a Hindu wife governed by the Vyavakara Mayukha, who obtained a decree for maintenance against her husband, her daughters as heirs of her "stridhun improper" are her legal representatives.(4) Again, on a plaintiff who obtained a decree against his father for partition dying pending appeal, his mother is his legal representative entitled to maintain appeal.(5) Where an appellant gave the property in suit by deed of gift, the donee was allowed to carry on appeal as heir but not as donee,(6) but this was before there was any section corresponding to sect. 372 of the last Code, or r. 1 of this, and the deed he set up was post-dated to the deed from the appellant under which the respondents claimed. An executor is the legal representative for the purposes of an appeal of a plaintiff who sued for possession of tarwad property, and to set aside an adoption made by the deceased karnavan, and, obtaining a decree for possession only, appealed and died.(7) An administrator, however, appointed under sect. 10 of Reg. VIII. of 1827, without leave being granted him to sue, is not the legal representative, nor is he entitled to contiuue an appeal; (8) nor can the representative of a deceased pauper continue an application for leave to sue as a pauper, such right being only a personal one.(9) Again, where the judgment-debtor in a suit for malicious and wrongful conduct sold a share of his property liable to be attached in execution and died, the purchaser could not carry on the appeal as his representative as the purchase deed did not make him liable for the deceased's personal debts.(10) Further, a claim based on personal trust cannot survive to a representative.(11)

"The Court, on an application."—This application is not necessarily confined to all the legal representatives, but one or more may apply and ask that those unwilling to join be added as defendants.(12) This is only imperative where the person is admitted to be the legal representative or where no dispute is raised; (13) but the Court is bound to grant the application, even where an appeal has been heard and decided without the appellant's pleader or the Court being aware of the appellant's death, and the representative applies to have his name placed on the record and the appeal reheard, the decree being a nullity.(14) See now as to this, r. 8, post.

"Proceed with the suit."—Objection to the applicant being added as a legal representative should be raised at the earliest opportunity, and failure to object precludes the opposing party from raising it at a later stage.(1) So where a decree has been made in favour of the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the Appellate Court should not go into the question of the representative's right to represent, or dismiss the suit on finding that he or she had no right.(2)

Applicability of clause (2).—The section in the last Code (366) corresponded with the latter part of sect. 102 of Act VIII. of 1859, with certain slight alterations made by Acts X. of 1877, and XII. of 1879, the explanation being added by the former Act and the words "within the time limited by law," and "shall on the application of the defendant" by the latter Act. The second paragraph of sect. 366 has been omitted. The Explanation appended to this section in the last Code has been also omitted, having regard to the definition of "legal representative" in sect. 2, ante. This rule applies to proceedings on appeal; (3) but it does not apply to a suit in which a decree has been made; (4) nor under the last Code to proceedings in execution of decree; (5) as to this, see now r. 12, post.

"Within the time limited."—That is, six months.(6) If no application is made by the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff and the suit is ordered to abate, it may yet be revived under r. 9.(7)

"No application."—Where two defendants appealed against a decree and one died, and no application was made to revive and the decree was reversed, held the decree remained good as against the estate of the deceased defendant.(8) If an application is made within time and is dismissed, the suit cannot be ordered to abate.(9) If an application be made by one of the heirs of the deceased appellant, the respondent is still entitled to have the other heirs put on the record.(10) Where an application for revival has been made, an order rejecting an application that a suit might be declared to abate and that the application for revival is invalid is not an order under this rule.(11) The words "any person" under the former section did not confine the application to an application by all the legal representatives, but for sufficient reasons any one or more might apply.(12)

"Shall abate."—The section in the last Code ran, "The Court may pass an order that the suit shall abate." It was proposed to be amended so as to give effect to the principle that abatement results from the operation of law and does not depend upon the making of an order. It was, therefore, suggested that the Court should merely declare that the suit had abated. The Select Committee, however, struck out the provisions that the Court might make an order declaring the abatement, as in its opinion it was unnecessary, and was likely to give rise to difficulty. If no application is made by the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff and the suit is ordered to abate, it may yet be revived under r. 9, and the order for revival may be made immediately after the order for abatement.(1)

"On the application of the defendant."—"Defendant" here includes plaintiff respondent and defendant respondent; (2) but a respondent in a special appeal cannot require the legal representative of the deceased appellant to be substituted and the appeal to proceed. He should file a cross appeal; (3) though if one of the heirs of the deceased appellant has applied to revive, the respondent is entitled to have the names of the other heirs put on the record so as to have them bound by the decree.(4) The application must be within six months of the death of the plaintiff.(5)

Appeals.—The Allahabad High Court held that no appeal lies from an order passed under the first paragraph of the former sect. 366 directing a suit to abate,(6) such an order not being a decree; (7) but both the Bombay and Madras High Courts have held such an order to be a decree.(8) No appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for a declaration that a suit had abated by reason of the death of the plaintiff and the invalidity of an application for revival by the representatives of the deceased plaintiff.(9) Where the special appellant dies and no representative applies to be substituted, the respondent cannot require the appeal to proceed. He should file a cross appeal.(10)
